What's YOUR view on a bridge-tunnel link?

The question of a permanent bridge-tunnel link between Vancouver Island and the mainland is a hot topic.

The provincial government is talking about a $500,000 feasibility study on the project, the cost of which has been estimated at more than $2 billion.

Engineering experts say such a link is within our technological capabilities but have raised some questions about both the cost and the psychological and social impacts of the project.

Government spokesmen — including Science Minister Pat McGeer — say they want public reaction to the idea and the Times has decided to help out.

The coupon (right) gives Greater Victorians a chance to express their opinion.

In order to get a broad public response on the proposal — which if implemented could have a tremendous effect on Vancouver Island lifestyles — the coupon will appear again Monday.

Please answer yes or no to the question but feel free to add any additional comments — as briefly as possible — and mail back your coupon to "Tunnel", c/o Editorial Department, Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas Street, Victoria V8W 2N4. Or bring the coupon to the Times switchboard.

Coupons should be in by 9 a.m. next Friday. Only one per person please.

We'll publish the results of the poll, print some of the more interesting comments and let the government know how you feel about the idea.

Should the province build a fixed link to the mainland?

Fiery blowout feared as volcano shakes

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — Constant earth tremors and periodic blasts of ash and steam from Mount St. Helens lead scientists to expect a major eruption from the volcano.

National Guardsmen were activated today to help county agencies control crowds around the mountain.

Col. Robert Rudolph, operations and military support officer for the state guard, said the 60 soldiers called up to join local law enforcement officials represented an "initial" contingent.

Rudolph said all 5,500 of Washington's National Guard were available in the event of a "major disaster."

The call-up of guardsmen was authorized by state officials acting under an official state of emergency signed by Gov. Dixy Lee Ray Thursday. With the mountain showing all signs of getting ready for a major blowout, other state agencies readied plans for a possible evacuation of the area.

Magma (molten lava) working its way up inside the 9,677-foot mountain set off the largest "harmonic tremor" yet, a rolling shaker midday Friday that lasted an unnerving 33 minutes, seismologists reported.

As the undulating died away, the volcano roared twice, spitting grit, steam and ash 15,000 feet into the sky for periods of 10 minutes.

While one sharp earthquake measuring 4.4 on the open-ended Richter scale jolted the mountain during the afternoon, U.S. Geological Survey scientists said earthquakes measuring under 3.0 on the Richter scale were occurring by the "thousands" each day.

"They're going on constantly, ranging from 1.0 to 3.0 and on up," said one seismologist at the U.S. Geologic Survey observatory at Newport, Wash.

Those in excess of 3.0 were "running about two or three per hour," and temblors in excess of 4.0 were rattling the mountain approximately every six hours, University of Washington spokesman Dave Endicott said.

The estimated 60 Spirit Lake area residents were evacuated days ago, except for salty Harry R. Truman, 83, who has refused to leave his 50-year-old lodge located some 6,000 feet beneath the mountain's fuming cone unless it was "feet first."

Visit the stars

Roy Scheider became well-known to movie-goers with his performance as a harried small-town policeman trying to protect the community from a giant shark in Jaws.

He was also a star in Jaws II, The French Connection, and Marathon Man.

Scheider has been nominated best actor for his performance in All That Jazz, a comedy about the life of a theatre and movie director.

Some New York critics were surprised when the film matched Kramer vs. Kramer with nine Oscar nominations. The nomination of Scheider was also a minor surprise, although his performance had been rated highly.

Others nominated for best actor are Dustin Hoffman, Kramer vs. Kramer; Jack Lemmon, The China Syndrome; Al Pacino, And Justice for All; and Peter Sellers, Being There.

Readers who correctly predict the winners for best actor, actress and movie will have a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood, in a contest sponsored by the Victoria Times and VI*90.

There are also five runner-up awards.

Charles felled by exhaustion

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Prince Charles, looking slightly sun-burned, was released from a hospital today, apparently recovered from the heat exhaustion that caused him to be admitted to the medical institution after a brisk polo game in sweltering heat.

"There he is, there he is," cried several of the dozens of staff members and visitors crowding the lobby of the Good Samaritan Hospital as the 31-year-old heir to the throne walked out to a waiting luxury car in which other young men were sitting.

Prince Charles, dressed in a navy-blue blazer, khaki pants and a blue-striped shirt, said nothing as he left but acknowledged the onlookers and reporters and photographers with a faint salute.

When he reached the red convertible, he turned, smiled at the nurse who had walked out with him, shook her hand and climbed into the driver's seat, saying lightly: "I'm all right."

He drove away, honking his horn once but not looking back.

Prince Charles was admitted to the hospital at 7:20 p.m. Friday after being checked by doctors at the institution's emergency room. His condition was then listed as satisfactory.

The prince had looked flushed and tired after finishing the match, played in high humidity and 32-degree heat at the posh Palm Beach Polo and Country Club on Friday afternoon.

Alligator on loose

BURNABY (UPC) — Police have advised citizens here to be on the lookout for a 45-centimetre long Kaman alligator that disappeared after being left to catch some afternoon sunshine in a backyard tub.

So far police are not sure whether 18-year-old Danny Todd's unusual pet, named Alex, was stolen or simply crawled away on his own, but they warned people to keep their distance from the alligator's mean bite.

City's meter men get 'hazard pay'

Victoria's motorists have become so cantankerous — even resorting to fisticuffs at times — that parking meter patrol men will get "hazard pay."

City council's finance committee has approved a 35-cent-an-hour raise for the stalwarts of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires.

They are veterans of the Canadian Forces and the RCMP but apparently the confrontations with abusive motorists are coming so thick and fast they are somewhat shell-shocked.

Victoria commandant J.C. Allan told aldermen in a letter that commissionaires are suffering morale problems.

"They are instructed to and make every effort to maintain the best possible rapport with the public, but this is not always possible.

"The level of abuse and physical mistreatment has increased over the past few years and has become a factor in the morale of the patrol," said Allan.

Now the corps bills the city $6.09 an hour for the meter patrol work it has done since 1955. The commissionaire gets $5.01 directly, with another 74 cents in direct and indirect benefits. The raise authorized by the committee will bring their direct pay to $5.36 an hour.

Assistant municipal manager Colin Crisp said police confirm recent cases of physical violence and threats against commissionaires while they are on the job.

"Verbal abuse frequently occurs."

He said the extra 35 cents an hour will cost the city $7,850 over a year.

And that's just one more bite out of the pugnacious motorist's pocketbook if he also happens to be a City of Victoria taxpayer.

Anti-Sadat protesters get bolder

By EDWARD CODY
Washington Post

ASSIUT, Egypt — Egypt's young Islamic zealots, with the deposed shah of Iran as a new target and a dead worker as their first "martyr," are becoming increasingly bold in opposition to President Anwar Sadat and his pro-Western policies.

The organized movements of Moslem fundamentalism are riding a wave of Islamic fervor washing across Egypt and the Middle East from the example of Iran.

Although so far they have only a limited following here, the extremists pose a challenge to Sadat's government because of their potential for arousing mob power in the teeming streets of Cairo or on the nation's 17 university campuses.

The move into the open also coincides with a recrudescence of suspicion and bitterness between Egypt's 36 million Moslems and its six million Coptic Christians despite Sadat's careful efforts to preserve a heritage of communal harmony.

An estimated 5,000 Islamic students took over the university here Thursday for a round of speeches, marching and chanting that included anti-Christian epithets and anti-Sadat slogans.

"Oh, pharaoh of this age, we don't want the shah in Egypt," the students cried, addressing Sadat as an ancient Egyptian despot in a chant that in Arabic rang out in appealing rhyme.

The protest leaders here Thursday, however, had for the first time a "martyr" to excite the crowd with and, perhaps for that reason, openly presented their previously unknown over-all leader.

He identified himself as Helmi Gazar, a 25-year-old student in his final year of medicine at Cairo University who accused Sadat of leading Egypt "far from God."

Bearded in the manner of Islamic purists — but dressed in Western clothes — Gazar spoke calmly and prudently in a conversation with reporters, urging that Egypt be led into more devout practice of its Moslem heritage.

"The principal thing (wrong with Sadat) is that he does not make the Koran be applied in the country of Egypt and we of course deny, or refuse, this system of life," he said. "He is away from God. We reject it all."

$15,000 bail for poison suspect

By RICHARD WEST
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Bail of only $15,000 was set for Richard Quincy Williams at his arraignment in Los Angeles federal court Friday on charges of trying to extort diamonds from two Safeway stores in San Diego by putting cyanide in food items.

Magistrate Ralph J. Geffen rejected a government request that bail be set at $250,000 for the suspect, who is also charged with attempting to extort diamonds from a San Diego jewelry store.

Williams, 46, appeared before Geffen just two weeks to the day that he was acquitted by a Riverside County jury of trying to extort $100,000 from a Sun City, Calif., Safeway store by putting cyanide in a box of cereal and injecting the poison into an orange in the produce department.

Geffen made his ruling after reading a sworn affadavit from FBI Agent Jerry L. Barnett, in which the agent said there was "probable cause to believe" that Williams also poisoned food items at a Safeway store in Palm Desert, Calif., and at the store of another food chain in Beaverton, Ore.

Barnett said that voice tapes of the extortionist's telephone calls implicated Williams, as did items the agent said he had "probable cause to believe" were in Williams' home and automobile in Winchester, Calif., where the suspect works as a horse trainer.

These items, Barnett said, include a typewriter used to write the extortion note in the Beaverton case, blue-lined yellow note paper similar to that on which a demand note was sent to a La Jolla, Calif., Safeway, a blue felt-type pen like that used to write that note, hypodermic needles and syringes, mixing vessels for cyanide, telephone numbers and addresses of Safeway stores and maps of San Diego, Beaverton, Ore., and Palm Desert.

In addition, the FBI agent said, there was reason to believe that Williams had in his possession $150 in marked bills that the extortionist in the Palm Deseert case picked up at a drop site set up by the FBI in an effort to trap the poisoner. The extortionist got the money but eluded agents.

Magistrate Geffen said of this affadavit:

"I'm not overwhelmed by the weight of the evidence the government has presented."

Geffen added that Williams has lived in Southern California since 1955, has a wife who works for a governmental agency in Riverside County, has children in the area and has serious heart problems and "does not appear to be a flight risk."

156% rise in caesareans mainly due to lawsuit fear

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fear of malpractice suits for delivering "a less than perfect infant" is the main reason for a 156 per cent increase in births by caesarean section in the United States in the last 10 years, a public health specialist says in a new study.

"Physicians said that a caesarean is defensive medicine and that even if a baby was less than perfect, if a caesarean had been performed, they were covered," Dr. Helen Marieskind of Seattle said in her report for the U.S. health department.

The study said the U.S. rate for caesareans was five per cent of all births in 1968, 12.8 per cent in 1977 and an estimated 13.9 per cent in 1978. Some hospitals reported caesarean rates as high as 25 per cent.

A caesarean section is the surgical removal of a fetus through incisions in the abdominal and uterine walls. The procedure is more dangerous than a natural delivery and costs about three times more, — between $2,000 and $3,500 in the U.S., the study said.

It said the medical profession orders caesareans routinely for subsequent births to women who have already had one caesarean — a practice that accounts for about one-third of all such procedures.

Ms. Marieskind, who estimated that half the repeat caesareans could be avoided, based her findings on interviews with more than 100 physicians and a review of medical literature on the subject.

Caesareans are categorized as major surgery and have a maternal mortality rate of one for each 1,000 procedures. About one-third of all caesarean patients suffer some type of post-operative infection.

The surgery also poses higher risks to an infant. When an elective caesarean is performed, there is the chance of respiratory problems if the child is premature, the study said.

"Caesarean section appears to be a sometimes useful and much needed technology presently utilized in an undocumented, unclarified and uncontrolled manner," Ms. Marieskind said.

Among the interdependent factors cited as contributing to the increase in the caesarean birth rate was physician training.

Ms. Marieskind said her interviews with physicians show "residents were not trained in normal obstetrics and were ill-prepared to manage labor."

Alps claim nine skiers

CERVINIA, Italy (AP) — An unidentified Italian skier was killed today by a huge avalanche on Italy's White Peaks slopes, and an unidentified 12-year-girl died in an avalanche near Mont Rose.

Seven skiers were killed and two hurt Friday in a crevasse on the Italian side of Mount Checrouit. Dead included Julie Spraoul, 12, of Jolk, England; Annabel Oliphant, 25, of Halemere, England; Richard Wood, 20, of Suttan, England; Josep Brunnberg, 40, of Wickcoc, West Germany; Consuelo Orlandi, of Varese, Italy; and Costantino Alpestre, of Turin.

Tunnel: no direct tax load

Former Social Credit cabinet minister Sam Bawlf said today the cost of a new bridge or tunnel link to the mainland could be paid out of revenues from resource industries and would not be a direct burden on taxpayers.

Bawlf was replying to a comment made in the Times Thursday by Vancouver consulting engineer H. Leslie Smith who felt the proposal may be "too rich for our blood."

Smith said if the $2 billion estimate of the bridge or tunnel construction is correct, British Columbians would be saddled with paying up to $300 million a year in interest alone.

But Bawlf said it has never been customary to have interest charges on major highways projects.

"I do not see this project as ever being a charge on the individual taxpayer," he said, adding the resource revenues could likely meet the expected costs of a bridge or tunnel.

Bawlf agreed with Smith's contention there might be a psychological barrier for travellers using a tunnel.

But he his concept for a tunnel is to use it exclusively for rapid rail transport with cars carried on flatbeds. He felt a tunnel large enough to allow motorists to drive through would not only be unsafe (what happens if a person runs out of gas and blocks traffic or there is an accident?) but too costly.

Bawlf rejected also a partial bridge link to Galiano Island, suggested by Smith and others, as ruinous to the Gulf Islands.

He said the best option is a floating bridge with the Island terminus somewhere between Duncan and Nanaimo and a rapid transit link to Victoria.

KKK head turfed 'to muzzle me'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan says he was ordered out of Canada because senior officials in the federal government wanted to muzzle his radical views on immigration.

David Duke left Friday for Louisana after he was issued a departure notice by immigration authorities who ruled the 29-year-old had misrepresented the purpose of his visit.

He said in an interview before departing that federal officials wanted to stop him from expressing his organization's views on Canadian immigration policy. The Klan believes that whites are superior to other races and should be separated from them.

"I think someone up top wanted to muzzle me and prevent freedom of speech on these issues,'' said the Klan leader. "There are people in government who have very distinct views on immigration.''

Oklahoma-born Duke arrived in Vancouver March 30 to visit friends, do some skiing and appear on radio open line shows.

He was arrested April 1, held briefly by immigration officials and released pending his appearance at a deportation hearing.

The application to have Duke deported as an inadmissible person was based on an accusation that he misrepresented himself at the crossing by not stating the purpose of his visit.

Another matter raised by immigration officer Richard McNeill, representing the department at the hearing, was Duke's conviction in Louisiana for inciting a riot. He received a six-month suspended sentence and a $500 fine.

Under questioning by McNeill, Duke said the immigration officer at the border crossing did not ask him the purpose of his visit. He said the officer merely wanted to know his citizenship and he said he was an American.

After it was decided Duke must leave Canada. John Taylor, Duke's lawyer, then argued that he should not be deported but allowed to leave under a notice of departure.

"It would be totally objectionable to have this U.S. citizen, because of his views, deported from Canada.''

The lawyer pointed to a copy of the Canadian Bill of Rights on the wall of the hearing room and reminded the adjudicator that it guaranteed the rights of freedom of speech and freedom of assembly.

"Deporting him would fly in the face of all the principles enshrined in the Bill of Rights,'' Taylor said. "Any American of any cultural view should be welcome in Canada.''

Earlier Taylor had submitted that Duke, like any other visitor to Canada, had a duty only to answer any questions put to him at the border. He said Duke was not obliged to volunteer information.

Asked by Taylor if he advocated non-violence, Duke said: he not only advocated non-violence but condemned any violent action.

'I am not up here to cause trouble,'' Duke told the hearing. "The only reason I was arrested was not because I violated the law but because I was appearing before the Canadian public.

"Government officials don't want the public to hear another point of view. That's why I'm at this hearing today.''

The adjudicator agreed there was no evidence to support the allegation that Duke misrepresented himself at the port of entry but found that because Duke was convicted he was an inadmissible person under the Immigration Act.

Duke was ordered to depart, which unlike a deportation order still permits him to enter Canada again under certain conditions.

Drift theory scientist dies

LA JOLLA, Calif. (Reuter) — British geophysicist Sir Edward Bullard, who helped pioneer the theory that the continents are drifting apart, has died of cancer at the age of 82. Sir Edward completed his final scientific paper just 10 hours before he died on Thursday, according to Lady Bullard, his wife.

RCMP raid causes walkout

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Workers at the Northwood pulp and paper mill here returned to their jobs the day after walking out to protest RCMP raids on the homes of six employees suspected of stealing company property.

The members of the Canadian Paperworkers Union walked out Thursday because they suspected mill management of instigating the raids. Only 37 of the mill's day shift crew of 108 showed up Thursday morning and many of the afternoon shift called in sick.

RCMP confirmed they searched the homes of six employees last week and confiscated goods belong to Northwood valued at $3,000. No charges have been laid.,

Northwood officials deny they had anything to do with the raids and said the actions were part of an independent RCMP investigation.

Law to back up uranium ban

VANCOUVER (CP) — Legislation will soon be introduced to back the government's seven-year moratorium on uranium mining, says the chairman of the royal commission into uranium mining.

Dr. David Bates said Friday the statement is contained in a letter he has received from the provincial government.

As a result, Bates said, the commission now will not appeal to B.C. Supreme Court the government's order-in-council terminating the commission's inquiry.

Bates said the letter was signed jointly by Energy Minister Bob McClelland, Environment Minister Stephen Rogers and Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe.

Premier Bill Bennett announced on Feb. 27 a seven-year moratorium on uranium mining and exploration in B.C., saying fears expressed by British Columbians concerning the dangers involved in uranium mining and exploration were too real to ignore.

Bennett said because of the government's decision, the inquiry by the Bates commissison was terminated, but the commission will continue to receive outstanding submissions until April 15, and has until Oct. 31 to complete its written report.

Tel hearings set

OTTAWA (CP) — Public hearings will be held in British Columbia in May to review B.C. Telephone Co. requests to increase rates for its radio-telephone service, the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission announced Friday.

The hearings will open in Williams Lake May 26 and continue in Campbell River May 27. Hearings also are scheduled for Vancouver May 28-29.

More than 240 comments have been received by the commission about the company's intention to increase rates for the service.

The company lately has suggested a $10 monthly charge for network access and a $1.40 a call charge for local calls compared with its earlier proposals of a $15 access charge and or 80-cents-a-minute charge.

A one-shot deal

Some may find it refreshing to see union and management officials in B.C. agreeing that a contract settlement is too high. John Fryer, president of the 40,000 strong B.C. Government Employees Union, and Bill Hamilton of the Employers Council are forcasting increased instability of the province's labor scene as a result of a tentative agreement giving a 44 per cent pay increase over 27 months to 27,500 nurses.

But in considering the work of nurses and their proposed salary compared to those in other labor sectors, one suspects that both men are overly concerned about public reaction.

Fryer's observation that "you can't take one group and leapfrog them over all other groups" implied that nurses' wages will be completely out of line and that other labor groups will feel no restraint when negotiating new contracts. However, after examining the merits of the nurses' case, most workers should be inclined to agree that the settlement was warranted.

A nurses starting salary in 1970 was $684 a month. If the proposed contract is ratified starting salary in 1980 will be $1,624 — and increase of 138 per cent. However, Vancouver fighters starting out received $724 a month in 1970. Today the salary is $1,907, an increase of 163 per cent. If Vancouver policemen had ratified the latest contract offer their starting salary would now be $ 2,053, up from $762 10 years ago. That's an increase of 169 per cent. Forest workers belonging to the International Wood-workers of Amercia have realized 191 per cent increase over the last decade.

If anything the nurses' salary increase could only be considered a catch-up rather than leapfrogging. If criticism of the nurses is warranted, it should be directed towards their contract negotiators who over the years have let the myth of nursing being a 'labor of love' perpetuate. The nurses have had collective bargaining rights longer that the BCGEU.

Fryer should cast his mind back to a mid-1970s BCGEU contract settlement that awarded government workers a 56 per cent boost in one year. That settlement too was considered a catch-up. It seems inappropriate for him now to be predicting industrial chaos that will probably lead to the reintroduction of wage and price controls after his own members enjoyed a similar one shot increase.

Although there is no doubt the nurses' contract could add pressure around the province's bargaining tables, it is to be hoped that the Employer Council president's contention that the settlement will unduly raise the expectations of other workers will not be fulfilled

Surely it can't be naive to expect that most union leaders and their rank and file will see the nurses' settlement for what it is — a one shot deal that closes a glaring gap between nurses' wages and those in the private and public sector.

Abortion: relatively new evil

By ANGUS McLAREN

The current backlash against abortion is of interest to the historian because many of the anti-abortionists' arguments appear to be based on the assumption that the inducement of miscarriage has been viewed always and everywhere in the western world as evil.

A cursory review of the literature reveals that this was not so. The practice was tolerated and at times lauded in both Greek and Roman cultures. Neither the Old nor the New Testament condemns a woman seeking abortion.

With the establishment of the Christian Church, attitudes shifted, but even under Canon Law the traditional view was long maintained that until the fetus quickened — that is, about eighty days after conception — life was not present.

Potions listed

The woman of early modern Europe who took abortifacient drugs before this time — and the fact that they did is indicted by the numerous recipes for such potions in cookbooks, almanacs and medical manuals — did so to "bring on their period" or make themselves "regular." The concept of quickening was to be of great importance; it meant that the woman herself determined if life was present and therefore if inducement of miscarriage was permissible.

Not until 1803 was abortion made a statutory crime in English law, and even then legislators continued to acknowledge the importance of quickening. It was with the passage of increasingly stringent laws in the nineteenth century that the concept was obliterated, the presence of life from the moment of conception asserted, and the criminality of the woman as well as that of the abortionist declared. Thus the sanctions against abortion as the twentieth century was to know them only came into being a little over a hundred years ago.

When put in historical perspective, the most obvious question raised by the abortion issue is not why the laws were reformed in the twentieth century but why they were first passed in the nineteenth. Clearly the attempts of the medical profession to increase its power and prestige played a role.

Doctors led the attacks on the concept of quickening and insisted that it was their prerogative and not that of the mother to determine the viability of foetal life. This enroachment by male professionals on women's childbearing was complemented by the elimination of those female medical practitioners who traditionally assisted at pregnancy — the midwives.

Medical arguments against abortion were but one aspect of the general fear of depopulation which emerged at the turn of the century. Canadian politicians expressed concern at both the decline of the English-speaking birth rate and the continued high fertility of the Quebecois and the non-British immigrants.

Contemporary commentators accused the women of English Canada of restricting family size out of the simple desire for greater luxury and self-indulgence. What few recognized was the fact that mothers were far from being indifferent to their child-bearing role — indeed they were often willing to run extraordinary risks in order to control it. Abortion remained playing its traditional role as a second line of defense against unwanted pregnancies largely because of the absence of effective contraception.

State interference

Thus what was "new" about abortion in the past century was not women's recourse to this type of birth control but the attempt made by the state and the medical profession to dictate the child-bearing duties of mothers.

In contrast, women's views towards their rights in the question of maternity remained remarkably true to traditional attitudes. Despite legal and medical anathemas they continued to believe in their right to control their own bodies, in their responsibility, until quickening, to make the difficult decision on which course would best assure the health and happiness of themselves and their families. It is this basic right of control of one's body that is still at issue today.

The alternative candidates

WASHINGTON — There are 176 candidates for the presidency of the United States.

Some of them are well known chaps with solid expectations of winning; men like Jimmy Carter, who already holds the job, and Teddy Kennedy and Ronald Reagan.

Some are moderately well known people running to gather publicity for a cause; folks like Barry Commoner of the Citizens Party, pushing an anti-nuclear crusade; Ellen McCormack, a Long Island grandmother with an anti-abortion platform and Cliff Finch, former governor of Mississippi, who wants to publicize the plight of truck drivers.

Then there are the rest.

Rhino equivalents

They range from the outraged to the outright loony, with every shade in between. It is hard to separate the tongue-in-cheek candidate — the equivalent of Canada's Rhinoceros crowd — from the rocks-in-the-head ones.

Their reasons for seeking election run the gamut from one California man, "Damn sick and tired of everything being screwed up," to a Maine woman who is on the campaign trail, for the fourth time, on direct orders from God.

All that is required is to file the right form with the Federal Election Commission. Such applications, and the financial disclosures required, are public documents available to anyone who wanders into the F.E.C. office on K Street in downtown Washington.

There the browser will find, cheek by jowl with the bulging documents of the Carter and Regan campaigns, the file of HRH$ Running Water Rockefeller, of Covington, Ky., that of Sacred Lorde Christe Devile Gode Hille of Sacramento, a lady addicted to "e."

One woman wants to be president because she thinks it would give her a better shot at finding her son, who walked out some years ago and hasn't been seen since.

Ken Erhardt of San Diego is running on behalf of the Committee to Elect a President Who'll Provide Freedom for All to Breathe (the long title gave the F.E.C. filers fits, and Erhardt lives under "Commitee to Elect a President Who'll"- a solid platform if ever there was one). He is against smoking.

Frank Starr of Kingston, Idaho, bills himself as Patriot-Profit Non-Partisan Third World Perennial Candidate for the Presidency of the United States And for the Presidency of the World.

Rather more modest is Maximum T. Englerius of Seattle, who is "not available for 1980" but whom has already begun his drive for 1984. He should win on momentum alone.

Not all candidates are equally well fixed. Earl V. Blackjack Stevens of Lebanon, Mo., shows his funds at $20,739,725, with no expenditures to date — a sum which the F.E.C. for some reason seems to doubt.

However, no one doubts the word of Nell K. Fiola of Burnsville, Minn., running on behalf of the New Millennium. She started out with $10.50 last year, but that has been whittled down to $9 by bank charges. It is, she affirms, "My own funds.".

Reagan can't say as much about his war-chest.

The F.E.C. tries to treat all candidates alike, but doesn't always succeed. Prophet Eli-jah of New York City has sent in a nasty note because he turned up on the computer print-out as "Fli-jah".

How would Carter feel if someone did that to his name.

A few retired

There have been a few drop-outs this time around. In 1976 three top contenders were: Ernest "Utopia" Whitford, who wanted to distribute free bran because he thought the nation was constipated; Accountability Burns, who wanted to make Dec. 24th a holiday because he was born on Dec. 25 and felt cheated and Sam "Mr.Clean " Silverstein, who wanted to put nudes on postage stamps to boost sales.

"We miss them", sighed a F.E.C. clerk.

Canadians confronted with such interesting candidates across the border need not hang their heads.

The Americans have never yet actually elected anyone who talked to his dead dog, like Mackenzie King, our prime minister for 21 years.

The passive smoker

BOSTON — I am, according to the New England Journal of Medicine, a passive smoker. I did not mean to be one. My parents did not raise me to be one. But there you are. The New England Journal of Medicine says I am one, and it ought to know.

What I meant to be was a plain old non-smoker. It fits my self-image better. It fits my habits better.

I am, you see, one of the lucky people who choked on the first green-tipped, personally labelled, sweet sixteen cigarette that ever touched my lips in 1957. I count this as a piece of biological luck, not unlike my inability to get drunk.

Years ago, I discovered that I fell asleep before I ever found the right lampshade for my head. So, I end up dozing instead of drunk, the way I end up coughing instead of cancerous.

It is not my virtue but chemistry which keeps me from falling down the path of assorted evils. If my jaw would only lock at the sight of assorted chocolates, I would be perfect.

But this morning I am in no position to gloat.

Two men from the University of California, San Diego, studied men and women at work. Some of the 2,000 worked in smoky places and some in smoke-free places. Now, the researchers have published the first study that proves what we knew all along, deep down in our lungs: Non-smokers are getting zonked by the smokers at work.

Professor James White and Dr. Herman Froeb put it more carefully in their paper. The way they figured it, non-smokers have about the same amount of small airways impairment as people who smoke up to about 11 cigarettes a day. Sounding like the Surgeon General's warning, they wrote that "chronic exposure to tobacco smoke in the work environment is deleterious to the non-smoker."

Informally, Professor White said simply, "We know that if a person works around another smoker for a period of time, he will experience lung damage. Now whether it will impair him or cause emphysema, we don't know. But who wants it?"

Not I, said the little red hen. But, at this very moment, I am sitting here at my desk passively smoking.

The man behind me, who is otherwise a charming neighbor, smokes cigars. They are not really offensive, he has explained to me patiently and in some detail, because they are good cigars. It's the cheap cigars that smell, he says, pointing one stinking stogie at another. I fail to make this class distinction.

Three yards away, the environmental reporter sits attached to his pipe. The smoke that surrounds it would make the EPA inspector condemn a plant. "It is," he admits, puffing thoughtfully, "a contradiction."

All around me are cigarettes whose smoke is mysteriously attracted to my magnetic personality. I am convinced that whenever I change desks in this city room, the air currents in my office shift and I am once again drifting in the Smoke Stream.

My situation isn't the worst by far. I have a friend who goes home every night and washes that Marlboro man right out of her hair. I have another who actually goes into the garage for a breath of fresh air.

I sympathize with smokers, although I no longer buy them ashtrays. (I have a friend who uses my daughter's dollhouse bathtub for his butts, but I promised not to tell a soul.) I imagine that stopping smoking is like stopping eating.

So, I don't want to ban smoke just because I don't want to work with banned smokers. But I don't want to inhale the stuff, either.

What I would like is to find the national scene more in line with the Minnesota Clean Air Act. What I would like is to extend the airline policy to the ground, wherever possible, and divide the work place into zones.

As the New England Journal of Medicine editorialized: ". . . the feelings and psychological reactions of smokers are as vehement as those of non-smokers. But now, for the first time, we have a quantitative measurement of a physical change — a fact that may tip the scales in favor of non-smokers."

Well, it's tipped my scale. This morning, at least, one more passive smoker is feeling aggressive.

Battle on for last of rain forests

ROBERT WILLIAMSON
The Globe and Mail

Anthony Island totems in Charlottes . . . UN to take over?

VANCOUVER — There's a special reverence for trees in British Columbia. Some see trees as an eye-pleasing mantle for the province's hugely-wrinkled landscape. Many more see them as pulp chips and two-by-fours, generating 50 cents of every dollar earned by the bustling rocks and logs economy.

And now the two seemingly irreconcilable views are embroiled in a bitter confrontation over the fate of some of the last of the rain forests' legendary giants on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The Charlottes, with some of the province's most prized timber — towering, 500-year-old, 65-metre red cedars with sitka spruce and hemlock, worth up to $15,000 each — also have the greatest concentration of environmentalists.

The islands also are the home of Haida carvers who were using the trees for canoes and haunting totems 2,000 years before being sighted by Spanish explorers in 1774. The spruce was used in Mosquito bomber airframes during the Second World War. Now the forests furnish high-grade wood for houses in Japan, guitars and novelty tourist dollars.

Private logging companies and the provincial Forest Service — about as powerful a duo as can be mustered here — are lined up against dedicated conservationists, provincial and federal parks, fisheries and wildlife agencies, and the Haida Indians.

And now the shadow of the United Nations has been cast over the conflict. First, there is a push to have Anthony Island, home of standing, century-old totems and Ninstints village longhouse remains, declared a rare world heritage cultural site by the UN's Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The provincial government and the Skidegate Band Council appear willing to have Ottawa make the nomination. It would put Anthony Island in the international leagues with the pyramids, Chartres Cathedral and northern Newfoundland's Viking village.

The real battle, though, is over the southern half of Moresby Island, which counts Anthony Island as a punctuation mark. Environmentalists rhapsodize over Moresby's mountains, mossy, cathedral-like forests, ocean cliffs, islands, foggy fiords, Peregrine falcons, sea birds and sealions. Parks Canada studies called the area Canada's Galapagos.

Despite the push to have the entire southern half of the island protected and declared a UN world heritage natural site, Rayonier Canada's 25-year cutting licence was renewed by Victoria last year for some of the east coast's most magnificent forests.

Rayonier's licence requires it to clear cut, leaving stump-stubbled meadows and mountain-sides. A moderate pro-park faction wouldn't object to selective logging in a South Moresby wilderness, perhaps using helicopters to minimize road construction in sensitive areas, but loggers say such selectivity would produce a silviculture slum.

Crown lands leased to Rayonier comprise about 40 per cent of the 1,400-square-kilometre proposed wilderness preserve. So far there has been no serious exploration by Victoria and Rayonier of a land swap to compensate for the cutting rights critics want the company to surrender.

Fighting back, Rayonier warns that curtailing its logging would eliminate 120 company jobs and cost the economy $18 million a year. The Islands Protection Society says tourists, drawn by the UN designation, would help offset the losses..

Moresby, wilderness advocates say, could become an eco-topia for everyone from millionaires to magic mushroom pickers (a northern wildlife sanctuary is considered the West's Napa Valley of hallucinogens).

Anthony Island is as good as in the UNESCO bag. It's been protected as a provincial park for 20 years. Abandoned near the turn of the century, efforts are now under way to preserve those totems that were not whisked away to adorn southern museums.

As a world cultural site it wouldn't automatically attract money for preservation work, but as the first West Coast Indian site on the UN world list it would receive prestige, visitors, extra protection and priority for money.

The Queen Charlotte Islands, said a report by the province's Environment and Land Use Committee Secretariat, are "a symbol of the wild, rugged and majestic aspects of Canada's West Coast proclaimed in such sources as school textbooks and Emily Carr paintings."

A provincial planning team is nearing completion on a land use plan, with options that range from wide open logging to strict preservation.

Ottawa and the planning team have asked the province to allow South Moresby to be placed on a list of potential UN heritage sites. Ottawa's interest may only add to the Moresby conflict. There has been an icy chill in federal-provincial relations since a resources squabble a year ago.

Logging and road building on the steep slopes of Rennell Sound, on Graham Island, by another company (with provincial approval in defiance of a federal order) sent mud slides into the salmon spawning beds of Riley Creek. Even the logging industry, under provincial law, concedes that the fishery there, under federal law, is more valuable than forestry.

Unresolved Haida land claims cover the entire coastline, rivers and streams of the Queen Charlottes. It took Victoria almost a year after the celebrated battle of Riley Creek to admit that logging had caused mudslides and to ban temporarily further logging on unstable steep slopes.

Studies by the IPS show that if B.C. adopted Alaska's steep slope restrictions, Rayonier would lose a large portion of its licenced lands. While the forest service and Rayonier grudgingly co-operate with the planning team, the IPS is reduced to raffling Haida art and publishing a review, All Alone Stone, to continue the six-year fight.

As Stewart Brinton, a northwest coast environment barracker, lamented recently, "It's a difficult time for environmentalists. They're about as popular as transvestites in a logging camp."

Doctors plead for support against obstetrics move

The policy of the Capital Regional Hospital Board to remove all obstetrical and pediatric services from the Royal Jubilee Hospital to the new Victoria General Hospital at Helmcken Road, if implemented, will have very significant and serious consequences for many residents in this community.

The original purpose of regionalizing health services was to consolidate "one-of-a-kind" services such as cardiac surgery in order to provide this expensive medical care economically and avoid duplication. This makes excellent sense with regard to highly specialized services. In the case of basic ordinary services such as obstetrics and pediatrics, it makes no sense at all.

Of the 1,400 mothers delivered each year in the Royal Jubilee Hospital, many live literally a few minutes away from that hospital. Obstetrics is one field of health care where the speed of access by the doctor to the patient in labor can be of enormous importance. If, as intended by the Regional Hospital Board, all deliveries will take place at Helmcken Road, situated on the other side of busy Douglas Street, some nine miles from the Royal Jubilee Hospital, it is obvious the time factor will add to the risks for many mothers and unborn infants. Mothers in labor will take longer to reach their place of delivery. Doctors will take longer to reach the patient. Where complications arise, this additional travelling time may mean the difference between a safe, successful delivery with a happy mother and a healthy infant, and a difficult distressed delivery with a worried mother and a damaged, possibly even dead, baby.

The proponents of one single obstetrical unit for the whole region argue that "bigger is better" and that such a single unit provides a higher standard of care than two separate units. How can this be when such a single unit makes it more difficult for some patients to reach the unit, and more difficult for most obstetricians to reach the patient? For example, mothers in the southern parts of Victoria, Oak Bay, Ten Mile Point and Gordon Head, now only minutes away from Royal Jubilee Hospital, will not only have to travel further, but will have to cope with heavy traffic on busy highways to reach their place of delivery.

The majority of family physicians and obstetrical specialists have their offices close to the Royal Jubilee Hospital. Comments about "the convenience of doctors" are quite irrelevant. Since it is the safety and good care of mother and infant which are paramount, these can hardly be assured if, instead of taking five minutes to reach the mother in labor . . . maybe troubled labor, the attending doctor takes 25 minutes. The claim that a higher standard of care would prevail in a single regional unit is false. In such situations, the delayed arrival of the doctor, upon which such care depends, would mean that the mothers would be delivered by the intern, the least experienced doctor on the scene.

The Victoria General Hospital has recently closed its staff to any further new family physicians. Doctors now practising in Sidney and delivering their babies in the Saanich Peninsula Hospital have no assurance that they will be permitted to deliver babies at Helmcken Road. Future fully qualified physicians coming on staff at the Royal Jubilee Hospital who wish to practise obstetrics have no assurance that they will be permitted to deliver babies at Helmcken. In short, mothers may well be denied the right to choose their obstetrician.

At a time when conservation is almost synonymous with patriotism, the additional miles to be travelled by mothers and visiting fathers, siblings, in-laws and grandparents will do little to reduce fuel consumption, or accidents, on the highways.

The obvious truth of the matter is that a total community of 250,000 people with two acute care general hospitals, justifies, indeed demands, that each of these two general hospitals, provide both obstetrical and pediatric services. The growing population in the western part of the region deserves hospital services closer to home, but not at the sacrifice of residents in Victoria and Oak Bay. The Royal Jubilee Hospital has an admirable track record over 64 years of providing first class obstetrical care. Existing facilities can readily be upgraded at reasonable expense, the family physicians and obstetrical specialists are near at hand, the nursing staff have proven that they are top notch, the most modern monitoring equipment is in place, communication is fast and effective. Why should a first class obstetrical unit be abolished by the decision of Regional politicians, with added risks to mothers and unborn babies? As both physicians and residents who pay our taxes to support hospital care, we are at a loss to know.

Why then are we taking this independent action?

The medical staff of the Royal Jubilee Hospital passed a motion unanimously that obstetrics and pediatrics be maintained at the Royal Jubilee Hospital. The president of the Board of Directors of the Royal Jubilee Hospital, Mr. Eric Simmons, presented that resolution to the Regional Hospital Board, which refused to alter its policy. As things stand, after the Helmcken Road Hospital opens its doors in 1982, every single mother in the capital region, which stretches from Sooke to Sidney, will have no choice but to go to Helmcken Road for delivery, and may not even be free to choose her own physician.

We find this unyielding attitude not only foolish and dangerous to mothers and babies, but unacceptable. We believe that, given the opportunity to understand the vital issues at stake, residents of this region will not only agree with us, but will want to join with us in a public campaign to have this ill-advised policy changed.

We invite individual citizens and community groups to contact the undersigned physicians, c/o Royal Jubilee Hospital, letting us know of your opposition to the Regional Board policy. We want you to be actively involved in the public campaign, a campaign which is urgently required to persuade the Regional Board that obstetrical and pediatric services must be maintained at Royal Jubilee Hospital and Saanich Peninsula Hospital. — Drs. G. Scott Wallace, Norman Rivers, R.N. Young, J.B. McCaw, H.R. Grimmond, G.E. Rasmussen and John McCracken

Pipeline finance

There won't be any federal funds for a gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. At least that's what energy Minister Marc Lalonde said when he visited Vancouver recently. So British Columbians will have to pay for the extension themselves. At least it looks that way now.

Joe Clark's Conservatives were going to help with a federal subsidy. Pierre Trudeau's Liberals are not. Mr. Lalonde is now saying, rather conveniently, that pipelines within a province are provincial. Only lines that cross provincial boundaries can be subsidized by Ottawa.

That is great for Quebec. It's great for the Maritimes. Getting their oil and gas from Alberta, they can apply for federal aid. But B.C., using B.C. gas, must go it alone because an underwater pipeline across Georgia Strait doesn't qualify as inter-provincial trade.

Our B.C. tax dollars help pay for a big diameter oil line from Sarnia, Ontario to Montreal now. They will shortly, also, be paying for gas line extensions into Eastern Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. So we need a tax offset to balance our books. What better device than increasing our provincial tax revenue from pipeline rights-of-way such as those which will be occupied by an Alaska Highway gas pipeline or a reversed Trans Mountain oil pipeline?

We must be careful. We mustn't discriminate between companies or we will offend the 1977 pipeline agreement between Canada and the United States. But, by taxing all our lines on a capacity basis we can raise enough money to pay for a gas pipeline to Vancouver Island and then some!

Historically B.C. has been generous to our long distance transportation companies. It granted rights-of-way to the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. which are worth hundreds of millions of dollars today. It turned over corridors to our oil and gas pipeline firms at minimal rates. It built highways which truckers bringing goods from as far away as Toronto and New York could use.

So why not take another look at the way these "national" carriers are taxed? They should, at least, pay their own way. And, in so doing, they will help to provide transportation services for all our people (including a natural gas service for Vancouver Island). — Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

Unfair restriction

Society over the past few years, I would like to believe, has learned that the handicapped have a place in the community.

We have the community involvement programs which promote an incentive to do something worthwhile; we have centres that enhance a person's abilities, we now have programs at the Camosun College to encourage a person to reach a greater potential.

Some of these people attending such programs or others like them travel on the public transit buses on a regular basis; therefore I feel the regional district is not looking fairly at putting such time restrictions regarding the bus pass. This is just another barrier for the handicapped to overcome.

Do most people realize the insurmountable barriers that most handicapped have to overcome day after day after day?

The handicapped have some living to do; I as a handicapped do not like being classified as a senior citizen yet.

The time restrictions regarding the bus pass will definitely create a hardship to a lot of us who are handicapped. — Elly Bowerman, 712-865 View Street.

Help still needed

While events in Cambodia have been overshadowed recently by those in Iran and Afghanistan, the potential for disaster in that troubled country still exists.

The people of Cambodia were faced with death by famine last fall but have been given a temporary reprieve through the unprecedented response of the international community. Over 150,000 tons of food, as well as other necessary medicines and supplies, have been delivered to Cambodia and distributed since October 1979, and that, coupled with Cambodia's own partial rice harvest in December, has provided adequate nourishment for the people at least until the end of April. After that, Cambodia will again be almost totally dependent on international assistance until the next major rice crop is harvested in November . . . if it gets planted.

To see that it does, $80 million is needed immediately for the purchase of rice, seeds, fertilizers and agricultural tools — in time for the spring planting. Unless these reach the provincial capitals quickly, the new crop will not be planted before the onset of the summer monsoons and as a result, next fall's harvest will be totally inadequate, leaving Cambodia again dependent on food aid into 1981.

According to Louis Wizniter, special correspondent with the Christian Science Monitor, "An atmosphere of confidence has gradually developed." And he credits the Unicef/Red Cross relief operation with averting the full potential effect of the disaster "mainly because it succeeded in isolating itself from politics." And Arnold Abrams reports in Newsday that "the government of Cambodia is doing its best in a country which lacks everything, even the most basic things."

The Canadian people and Canadian governments responded most generously to the first Cambodia appeal. But in the words of Unicef official Tony Hewett, "If we are going to make a long-term impact, we must now give them more than a band-aid. Cambodians must get back on their own feet."

To do this they need our help to see them through the next eight months and to ensure that the next winter's rice harvest is successful. — Joanna Miller, President, Unicef Canada.

Historical data

Camas Historical Group of the James Bay New Horizons is anxious to procure more historical data about the district before it is too late.

As custodians of such material the group is currently cataloguing what is on hand.

If you have any printed articles, pictures or personal information which was not included in Camas Chronicles which was published last year please send them to the undersigned at 234 Menzies Street, Victoria, B.C. V8V 2G7. — Louise M. Iverson, Camas Historical Group.

Thorne Riddell give up consulting to new firm

TORONTO (CP) — Thorne Riddell and Co. of Toronto, a leading chartered accountancy firm, will turn over its management consulting practice May 1 to Stevenson and Kellogg of Toronto. The new company will take the name Thorne, Stevenson and Kellogg.

Under the terms of an agreement worked out over five months, the management consulting firm of Stevenson and Kellogg will acquire all the current work of Thorne Riddell's management consulting branch as well as its staff of 30 consultants across Canada.

No money will change hands and there will be no financial or direct organizational connection between the two firms.

Kenneth Gunning, executive partner at Thorne Riddell, said the arrangement will serve the needs of both companies.

The transfer of accounts will increase Stevenson and Kellogg's volume by 25 per cent.

The company will benefit from Thorne Riddell's expertise in the specialized area of financial consulting, while Thorne Riddell's accounting clients will gain access to a full range of management consulting services.

Gunning said another advantage for Thorne Riddell will be to remove any suggestion of a possible conflict of interest between its functions as a chartered accountancy firm and its management service.

"The securities and exchange commission in the U.S. has become concerned that peripheral services — especially management consulting — impairs the independence of auditors," he said.

Gunning said he sees some of the same concern in Canada, where most major accountancy firms carry on management consulting practices.

"I don't agree that auditors have, in fact, lost their independence, but if securities regulators and the public come to believe they have, then they will have lost their value."

Kaiser coal price deal set

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kaiser Resources Ltd. announced it has reached an agreement with its Japanese customers and partners to increase the price of metallurgical coal sold under the company's long-term contract.

Edgar F. Kaiser, Jr., chairman and chief executive officer, said the price has been increased by $4.35 to $63.95 a long ton effective April 1, 1980, and will increase by a further $4.10 to $68.05 effective April 1, 1981.

The contract amendment provides that no further price escalation for cost increases will be allowed during the two-year period.

The company and its Japanese customers have agreed to shipments of 4.3 million long tons of metallurgical coal in the year ending March 31, 1981, and a minimum of four million long tons in the year ending March 31, 1982, Kaiser said in a news release.

GM raises 1980 prices more hikes expected

DETROIT (UPI) — General Motors Corp. raised the sticker price of its 1980 cars Monday by an average of $186 or 2.2 percent effective Tuesday.

The action likely will touch off the third industry-wide round of automotive price hikes on the 1980 models, including introductory prices.

GM said the average price hike also reflects a price reduction of $100 on the list price of optional V-6 engines in the "X-car" compacts — the Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark.

Price increases on individual models ranged as high as $449 on the Cadillac Seville, while prices remained the same on others, GM said.

Virtually all option prices will remain the same, but destination charges will be increased by $15, a GM spokesman said.

GM is the industry's pricing leader and its actions usually are followed by similar price hikes from Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. Chrysler, however, jumped the gun earlier with a third model-year price hike that applied only to its subcompacts and imported vehicles.

The No. 1 automaker said the price hikes are within the government's new anti-inflation guidelines.

GM pledged recently to practice price restraint after being found in technical violation of wage guidelines in the contract it signed last fall with the United Auto Workers union.

The price hike, said GM Chairman Thomas A. Murphy, only partly covers cost increases at a time when profit margins are being eroded and capital spending requirements are increasing.

"Our costs continue to increase at double digit rates while our price increases continue to conform with President Carter's anti-inflation program," Murphy said. "Under that program, prices of our vehicles have increased by less than 7 percent annually.

"At the same time, GM's internal capital requirements are rising."

The daily Yomiuri Shimbun says that Li Xue, vice-chairman of the Guangdong provincial external economic committee, disclosed the plan when he received a Yomiuri Shimbun delegation in Canton on Thursday.

Robot future

NEW YORK (AP) — During the next decade people will be able to work at home by computer, depend on robots to do babysitting and wear phones on their wrists, a magazine article says. Author George Harrar says he based his predictions on prophesies made by planners, theorists and futurists.

Housing starts picture bleak

OTTAWA (CP) — Housing starts fell to a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 155,300 units in March, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp. has announced.

The figure, down from February's annual rate of 168,800, suggests 1980 could be the worst year for housing construction since 1966.

The federal housing agency said actual starts in urban areas last month were 6,182, down 24 per cent from the comparable figure in March, 1979.

Work on single detached houses was down only slightly, but starts on multiple-unit dwellings were off 36 per cent from a year earlier.

Housing-industry and CHMC officials alike have attributed the poor showing in construction this year to record-high interest rates.

Total housing starts in Canada were 197,049 units last year, the fourth year in a row that the total has declined. The worst year for housing construction in recent times was 1966, when only 134,474 units were begun.

Trust firms feel rate pinch

MONTREAL (CP) — High interest rates will mean a tough time for trust companies while they wait for revenues to catch up with their cost of borrowing, Montreal Trust president Paul Britton Paine told the company's annual meeting Thursday.

"The effect on interest rates is immediate, while there is a lag effect, even in a well-matched portfolio, before the benefits of rising revenues on the lending side of the equation become evident," said Paine, who is also chairman of the board of Montreal Trust.

"Our margins, or spread, as it is commonly referred to, deteriorated badly in 1979, and this was particularly painful in the last three months of the year . . . . We expect at least the first six months of 1980 to be difficult."

Canadian interest rates soared to new highs this week, with most banks charging 17.5 per cent on new loans to top corporate customers.

Talking later to journalists, Paine said residential mortgage-seekers are hard hit by high interest rates, but commercial real estate is also bound to suffer. "High rates have stultifying effects on every aspect of business, and if it continues it will drag us into a recession."

Montreal Trust aims for a margin of 1.5 per cent between what it pays to lenders and borrowers, he said. But lately its margin has been cut to about half that, bringing 1979 profits down 11 per cent from a year earlier to $6.33 million, or $2.45 a share, from $7.09 million, or $2.75 a share.

Assets, meanwhile, rose to $1.206 billion from $1.027 billion.

In his speech to shareholders, Paine expressed concern about the re-election last February of the federal Liberals.

Boycotts and protests: do people really care?

Well, the Moscow Olympics are going ahead, as if anyone doubted it, and probably with a much bigger field than earlier anticipated.

And the reason is that U.S. president Jimmy Carter's call for a boycott has crumbled on the rocky shores of political expediency.

Because if a lot of nations have been waffling about whether to go or not, it is probably politically proper for them not to tip their hand too soon. And not yet. They don't have to make a decision until May 24, so why jump? They really don't want to pass up the Games for whatever reason and are not certain that staying away will punish the Soviet that much.

Or it could be that sports, which may be trivial to some, are not only important and necessary, even indispensable, to others.

At any rate, the longer countries remain in a holding pattern it likely means they'll end up in Moscow.

As for Carter, he made the only move he could and the right one. It was popular then but now public opinion appears to be swinging the other way. Or do people really care?

Sure, the Afghans didn't ask for the Russian tanks, but will the boycott work? Will it serve the purpose of letting Soviet people know how the other half feels about Russian aggression? It's doubtful. Because wars come and go, so do international protests and people forget.

Boycotts are nothing new, whether called boycott, or simply not showing up. Is there a difference?

In other years, Eastern Bloc countries have boycotted the Games. So have the Africans. Now the wheel has turned full circle so to speak because it was in 1936 that the U.S. threatened the first boycott.

Avery Brundage, the USOC chief, who later was to become the major domo of the movement, warned Hitler the Americans would not compete if there was any discrimination against Jews on the German team. Brundage was not a government figure. Still it was a political move. The warning was heeded. Hitler abided by the rules and a Jewish fencer, Helene Mayer, competed for Germany and captured a silver medal.

Then in 1948, as some kind of punishment for their war-mongering, Germany and Japan were not allowed to compete. By 1952 they had been forgiven their sins. The fight then was about an all-German team and the East Germans wouldn't go. In Helsinki, a special village was built to house Eastern Bloc athletes. In 1956 in protest of the Soviet invasion of Hungary and also the Suez crisis, The Netherlands, Switzerland, Spain and Egypt pulled out.

In 1960 the dispute centred around the all-German's team flag, the Bonn government capitulating. In 1964 a resolution to allow East Germany to compete as a separate team was rejected. In 1968 boycott threats of the African countries were successful. The IOC was forced to revise its decision to allow South Africa to compete when Russian supported the Africans and South Africa was barred because of its policy of apartheid.

Scandanavian countries broke off sporting ties with Russia after the Soviets invaded Czechoslovakia, but when the Czechs said they would enter the Games, the Scandanavians relented and withdrew their withdrawal. The Rhodesians were sent home in 1972 when again the Africans threatened a pullout and in 1976 Pierre Trudeau would not allow the Taiwanese to compete at Montreal.

This marked the first time actually that a host country had dictated to the IOC and the terms were accepted. Figuring this was a good time to make another of their threats, the Africans jumped in and demanded New Zealand should be banned because its rugby team had played against South Africa. What that had to with the Olympics was never fully explained. The IOC refused and Africans from 22 countries stayed home. Another eight countries never bothered to show.

The Soviets have done their share of protesting too.

They boycotted the dual track meets with U.S. in 1966, 1967 and 1968 to protest American involvement in Vietnam; the 1967 World University Games in Tokyo because of a dispute over the exact wording of North Korea's name; the qualifying round of the 1974 World Soccer Cup because it was to be held in Chile; the 1975 modern rhythmic gymnastics world championships, to protest Spain's execution of Basque terrorists; the 22nd chess Olympics in 1976 because it was held in Israel; the 1978 world shooting and 1979 world basketball championships because in each instance South Korea was the host. The USSR has also refused to play Chile in the Davis Cup and has boycotted several events in West Berlin including the European table tennis championships (1963), the women's team handball world championships (1965), the junior world championships in modern pentathlon (1973), the world speed skating spring championships (1976) and the world archery championships (1979).

Russia was also outside the Olympic movement from 1917 to 1951 and in 1968 was behind that South African ouster.

Hawk keeps Cats on toes

By ERNIE FEDORUK

In Victoria Cougars' dressing room, Torrie Robertson is "the Hawk."

In the eyes of professional scouts, No. 9, on the ice, is the grinder. A hard-nosed 19-year-old winger, he bumps and grinds in the corners, sticks to his position well and is quick to come back and pick up his rival winger.

In his two Western Hockey League campaigns, Robertson's penalty minutes have exceeded, by a great margin, his goal totals. As a rookie, last season, 15 goals and 198 minutes. This season, 23 goals and 298 minutes.

More than one scout sees similarity in the styles of Robertson and teammate Greg Adams, although there is a discrepency of 49 goals and 86 penalty minutes this season. Adams scored 62 goals while serving 212 minutes in penalties.

Both seem to be at their best when they're bumping and skating, and taking the odd penalty. "They're in the game," is the way the scouts put it.

The Hawk was certainly in the game Friday when the Cougars virtually wrapped up a spot in the Western Division final by defeating Seattle Breakers 5-2 before a near-capacity turnout of 4,812 fans at Memorial Arena.

Robertson took four minors and a 10-minute misconduct to account for 18 of Victoria's 27 sin minutes. But Torrie also scored two goals, including the prettiest of the night, and figured in a third to earn acclaim as the game's first star.

(He was the media's overwhelming choice but Mayor Bill Tindall, who happens to sit behind the penalty box, might have deducted points for Robertson's vocabulary after drawing the misconduct from referee Gerry Pateman.)

The goals were Robertson's second and third in four games. Barry Pederson, scoring his fourth while on a penalty-killing assisgnment; Bob Jansch, capping a strong game with his third, and Grant Rezansoff got the others for the Cougars while Tom Stanger and Alan Graves connected for Seattle.

The Cougars threatened to blow Breakers out of the rink early. They got off to a 4-0 lead, then doused their own fire for about 30 minutes before coming back strongly in the final 10 minutes.

"I'm not pleased with the way the attack shut down in the second period," said Victoria coach Jack Shupe, "but they played well in that they allowed Seattle to take only 12 shots on net in the game."

The Breakers spread their shooting evenly, taking four in each period at Kevin Eastman. Cougars, on the other hand, fired 36 at Ken Hodge of Seattle.

The Cougars need to win only one of their remaining four games to clinch at berth in the best-of-seven divisional final. They hope to do it tonight when they visit the Winter Hawks in Portland, then move on to Seattle for a Sunday night rematch with the Breakers.

Seattle now has a 2-3 won-lost record while Portland is 1-4 in the double round-robin semi-final series.

Regina Pats, meanwhile, got away on the right foot in the Eastern Division's round-robin, defeating Brandon Wheat Kings 6-3 Friday before 5,798 fans in Regina. Doug Wickenheiser led the way with two goals and an assist.

The Wheat Kings and Medicine Hat Tigers joined the Pats in the second round after winning the telling games Thursday in their respective quarter-final series.

The fifth-place finishing Wheat Kings eliminated second-place Calgary by embarassing the Wranglers 10-3 before 7,995 fans in Calgary. Medicine Hat had to work harder. Steve Tsjuira's goal at 6:31 in sudden-death overtime enabled Tigers to slip by Billings Bighorns 3-2 in the deciding game of their best-of-seven series.

Off the ice, fines totalling $3,850 were levied by referee-in-chief Del Wilson against clubs and officials involved in playoff-game incidents.

Medicine Hat Tigers and Billings Bighorns were each fined $1,000 for a bench-clearing brawl in Medicine Hat March 31. Brandon Wheat Kings were fined $1,000 for not having proper police protection to handle an incident in Brandon March 29.

Brandon coach Dunc McCallum was fined $250 for not controlling Wheat Kings players in a game in Calgary April 1.

Owner John Hamilton of the Breakers was fined $350 and Seattle trainer Hank Robb $250 for berating an official after a game in Seattle March 27.

Gretzky requires help from Butler

By The Canadian Press

Wayne Gretzky or Marcel Dionne will win the National Hockey League scoring championship tonight, and their hot struggle almost overshadows the end-of-season jockeying for playoff positions.

Primarily because it is Gretzky.

Edmonton Oilers' 19-year-old star centre, took the lead away from Dionne on Friday when he helped the Oilers clinch their playoff berth with a 6-2 win over Colorado Rockies in their final game of the 80-game schedule.

Gretzky scored his 51st goal and added two assists for a total of 137 points. Dionne has 53 goals and 135 points, and needs at least two points in his final game tonight in Los Angeles to win the scoring title. The opposition is Vancouver Canucks, still fighting for their playoff lives.

The Canucks defeated both teams this week — the Oilers 5-0 Tuesday, the Kings 4-2 Thursday — and effectively used Jerry Butler to handcuff Gretzky and Dionne.

Asked if he thinks his two-point lead over Dionne will be enough, Gretzky said, "No, honestly, but Butler has done a great job the last two games holding me off and Dionne off. I can only hope he does it once more."

In the event Gretzky and Dionne have the same number of points when Dionne leaves the ice tonight, the player with the most goals — Dionne — would be awarded the trophy.

Elsewhere Friday, New York Islanders defeated Atlanta Flames 7-3 and Hartford Whalers bombed Quebec Nordiques 9-2. In other games Thursday, Buffalo Sabres knocked the Nordiques out of playoff contention with an 8-3 waltz and Philadelphia Flyers defeated Washington Capitals 4-2.

The slate of 16 playoff teams will be filled tonight. The Oilers will finish 15th or 16th, with either Vancouver or Washington rounding out playoff entries.

The Canucks have 68 points compared to Washington's 66, with each having the lone game tonight left to play. If they tie at 66, Washington, on the strength of a greater number of wins, would qualify.

Edmonton's win erased a slim mathematical playoff hope held by Detroit Red Wings, who now finish out of the playoffs for the ninth time in the last 10 seasons.

Friday's easy win boosted New York to fifth place and assured the Islanders of no worse than a sixth-place finish in over-all standings. Bob Nystrom and Bryan Trottier had two goals each for the Islanders, unbeaten in their last 11 games. The Flames will finish ninth over-all and meet either New York Rangers or Chicago Black Hawks in the first round.

The Whalers will finish 14th over-all with the win and open the playoffs in Montreal, Buffalo or Boston, depending on which of those teams finishes third.

Equestrian body backs boycott

Times News Services

The Canadian equestrian team has voted to support a boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympic Games.

The Canadian Equestrian Association's board of directors voted unanimously in favor of a resolution urging the Canadian governmet to join the Games boycott proposed by U.S. President Carter to protest the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

The resolution was sent to External Affairs Minister Mark MacGuigan and Sport Minister Gerald Regan.

The federal government will decide later this month if it will support a U.S. boycott.

And in Colorado Springs, one of the mainstays of the Canadian Olympic basketball team says the boycott decision should be made by the federal government alone.

Team captain Martin Riley said Friday: "The federal government pays the shot for amateur sport. So it should call the shots. I don't feel it is the sort of decision an athlete or anyone else should have to make."

Forget season, suggests Autry

Times News Services

Gene Autry, owner of California Angels, is angry enough over the most recent action of the Major League Players' Association to call off the entire 1980 baseball season.

Autry is still steaming over Tuesday's action of the players, who called a strike of remaining exhibition games, said they would return to start the regular season on April 9 but might strike again May 22.

"Frankly, if I had my say and the other owners agreed with me, I'd close down for the season," said Autry. "What's the sense in going out again? It's a waste of our time, their time and a lot of money.

"There's no reason for it and I would just as soon forget the season."

Autry believes the players demonstrated bad timing and bad judgment and acted in such a way as to lock themselves out when they walked out on the exhibitions. He says he might probe the sentiment of other owners regarding a one-year moratorium.

"There's only so far you can go, only so much water in the well, and for an owner who is trying to do the right things it's all very frustrating."

While Autry was fuming in California, negotiators for management and the players attacked the strike threat Thursday in New York with the help of federal mediator Kenneth Moffett, who presided over two hours of meetings he called fruitful.

Moffett and the two sides set up a schedule of seven meetings over the next three weeks in an effort to settle the dispute.

The first meeting is scheduled for next Tuesday — one day before the start of the regular season.

It was the fourth straight victory for the Vancouver-based Canadian team, which includes shortstop Sandy Ferguson of Victoria. The tourney continues until Wednesday.

The high cost of sports is forcing another Washington university to drop some or all of its intercollegiate athletic programs.

Western Washington at Bellingham may drop its programs as early as the fall of 1981. University president Dr. Paul Olscamp blamed fiscal problems, and the fact the Evergreen Conference "appears to be falling apart."

Eastern Washington is out of the conference and Central Washington is scheduled to end its membership in 1981.

Earlier this week, Seattle University announced it would eliminate athletic scholarships, thereby leading to its withdrawal from major college competition.

Blazers take Sonics to the wire

By The Canadian Press

Julius Erving was not concerned about a second-half letdown by Philadelphia 76ers. He was concerned about Washington Bullets getting hot.

And he was right.

"We did what we wanted in the first half," said Erving, the game's high scorer with 31 points after Philadelphia defeated Washington 112-104 Friday night in Landover, Md., to win their National Basketball Association playoff series. "We knew they were going to try to come back.

"We just didn't know how successful they were going to be."

Philadelphia advances to the quarter-final round against Atlanta Hawks beginning Sunday.

The three other preliminary-round playoff sets, all best-of-three series, were forced to third and deciding games, also to be played Sunday.

Portland Trail Blazers surprised Seattle SuperSonics 105-95, San Antonio Spurs edged Houston Rockets 106-101 and Kansas City Kings dumped Phoenix Suns 106-96 to even each series at 1-1.

Behind the 16 points of Erving and the 12 of Bobby Jones, who ended with 18, the 76ers played almost a perfect first half to take a 64-46 lead into the locker room at the break.

"We wanted to do more of the same in the second," said the incredible Dr. J., "but a couple of their people got rolling in the second and made it a game.

Elvin Hayes got 16 of his 26 points in the second half while John (Supe) Williamson got all 14 of his points in the last 24 minutes. The Bullets closed to within four points in the waning minutes but Philadelphia's troops settled down and withstood Washington's rally.

Guards Ron Brewer and Billy Ray Bates triggered a late Portland outburst as the Trail Blazers downed the defending champion SuperSonics in overtime. Brewer and Calvin Natt had 27 points each to lead Portland scoring. Bates, who had scored only two by halftime, wound up with 20. Dennis Johnson led Seattle with 24 points and Gus Williams and Jack Sikma each had 20. Seattle led 33-23 at one point in the second quarter.

Forward Scott Wedman scored 32 points and guard Otis Birdsong added 30 to keep the Kings alive and send the teams back to Phoenix for the deciding game. Centre Alvan Adams led Phoenix with 22 points and guard Paul Westphal contributed 18.

Things bright for Nina; Wendy back on courts

By MAX LOW

'Tis spring and a young man's fancy, and a young woman's, too, for that matter, turn to thoughts of — tennis.

And, as we all start getting out there to bash balls around the courts, we wonder at this time of year what is happening to Victoria's own "Tennis Twins" of the international circuits, Wendy Barlow and Nina Bland.

In the latest rankings released, the Victoria girls are tied for second spot nationally behind Marjorie Blackwood of Ottawa.

For Nina the spring heralds another season of tough tournament play; a case of staying up there and making even more of a mark internationally than she did during a good season last year.

But for Wendy it's the start of a hard road back.

Barlow has been ill and out of tennis most of the time since her fine performance for Canada in the Pan-American Games in Puerto Rico last July.

Competing in tournaments soon after the Games, Wendy became tired and almost collapsed on a couple of occasions but it wasn't until later, in October, that doctors discovered she had mononucleosis along with, her mother says, a host of other complications including infectious hepatitis.

"She came home for a while and the doctors laid it on the line," Mrs. Barlow explained Thursday. "They told her that if she went back to tennis too soon, it could be the end of her career."

And so Wendy, who had decided to take a year off her studies to concentrate on tennis, had to drop out of the Avon Futures Circuit and, for a while anyway, give up the game she loves. On March 1, some 20 pounds lighter, Wendy picked up her racquet again and tentatively started practicing once more, half an hour a day at first and then an hour.

Two weekends ago, she ventured out for her first tournament, a little affair in Ottawa called the Power Shoes event — and she won it, beating Lisa Senn of Toronto in the final.

However, poor Wendy had to pull out of a second Power Shoes tourney last weekend in Burlington, Ont., when she cut her right hand — the one that holds her racquet — while drying a glass and had to have the gash stitched.

Now that seems to be healed and this weekend Wendy is playing in the qualifying rounds of the big Family Circle tournament at Sea Pines Plantation, S.C.

"Wendy has an apartment in Toronto now and is playing out of the Ontario Racquet Club where she is being trained by former Canadian champion Pierre LaMarche," said her mother. "So perhaps this is the year that things will start to happen for her."

Things have already started to happen for Nina, who is home with her family for the Easter break.

"I've just heard, unofficially so far, that I've been named to Canada's team for the Federation Cup tournament in West Berlin," she said exicitedly on Thursday.

Although it's likely, too, that Wendy Barlow will also be on that team, Nina said she'd been told by Vancouver-based pro Ian Brady, with whom she works out, that she and Marjorie Blackwood are the only definite team members to be selected to date.

Nina will probably be here until the start of May, when she'll leave to compete in the Italian Open and after that to train in Europe for the Federation Cup.

"I've been playing quite a lot," she explained. "Last week I lost in the final qualifying round of the big $50,000 Honda Civic Classic in La Costa, California. I reached the last eight out of 32 trying for four qualifying berths and was beaten 3-6, 6-3, 6-3 by Jane Preyer of South Carolina. But in the second round I upset Carol Bailey, who was the hot favorite among those in the qualifying round, 3-6, 6-4, 7-6."

So right now things are going well for Nina Bland and they look like getting even brighter.

"I just heard yesterday I've been offered a full tennis scholarship at California's prestigious Berkeley University," she said. "And so it looks as though I'll be going there in the next school year."

Moretti will leave Phoenix Sunday to join his new Eastern League team.

Six men convicted in race-fixing case

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Six men were convicted Thursday of conspiring to fix horse races at Pocono Downs as part of an operation alleged to be involving organized crime figures and tracks in several states.

The guilty included three jockeys, two trainers and a local man who the government charged was part of the plot.

Six others in the case were found innocent by a federal court jury following a prolonged trial and more than five days of jury deliberations.

There were originally 21 men charged in the Pocono Downs case. Four other jockeys pleaded guilty. Three defendants are listed as fugitives and two had their cases separated.

"I don't understand it, it's very inconsistent," said defendant Joseph Sciandra of West Pittston, Pa.

He was convicted on one count of conspiracy and 24 counts of interstate sports bribery. Each count carries a maximum criminal penalty of five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

U.S. District Judge Sylvia Rambo gave the six convicted men 30 days to file appeals and said any possible sentencing was at least two months away.

The prosecution said jockeys and others were bribed in more than two dozen races at Pocono Downs, located near Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to prevent certain horses from placing in the money during the summer of 1974.

It was alleged to be part of a widespread race-fixing scheme engineered by Anthony Ciulla, an admitted race-fixer from Somerville, Mass., who was the government's star witness.

Ciulla was freed from a New Jersey prison after he decided to cooperate with authorities, and has also testified at related federal trials in Boston and Detroit.

Among those convicted was trainer Vernon Ewalt, who was severely beaten apparently because he violated the criminal operation's rules by placing personal bets on fixed races, trainer Guy Tumminello and jockeys Paul Whitemen, Ronald Scott and Lucien Parent.

Juan de Fuca Gulls provided their home-arena fans with excitement Friday in the opening rounds of the Juan de Fuca invitational bantam hockey tournament.

In one of their two contests, the Gulls were clipped 6-5 by New Westminster after a pulse-tingling finish, in which the home club lifted its goalie for an extra attacker, pulled within one goal with 20 seconds remaining and then had a shot bounce off a post on a game-ending rush.

In other contests, Kerry Park edged Port Alberni 4-3 and trimmed North Surrey 4-1, Comox defeated Port Alberni 2-1 and lost a 7-2 decision to North Surrey, and North Delta clipped South Delta 5-1 and played to a 3-3 deadlock with New Westminster.

Racing pact bridges rift

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The 17-month rift between the U.S. Auto Club and the dissident Championship Auto Racing Teams has been bridged with an agreement that will allow championship racing to be run under a new Championship Racing League.

Under the agreement, hammered out at a marathon meeting in Hot Springs, Ark., the CRL will administer championship car racing, but USAC will be the sanctioning body.

The new CRL board now must work out a schedule combining the USAC and CART racing schedules for 1980, paring them from 27 races to about 15.

The first race will be the Twin 200 at Ontario, Calif. on April 13.

Injured U.S. pole vaulter dies

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Pole vaulter Cliff Schnedar died Friday without regaining consciousness in the four days he was hospitalized after his head struck a slab of concrete at the edge of the vaulting pit at San Diego State University.

Schnedar, 25, had qualified for the U.S. Olympic trials last Sunday by vaulting 5.26 metres at Walnut.

After the Monday accident here, he underwent brain surgery at Alvarado Community Hospital. A spokesman said "it was a family decision" to disconnect Schnedar's life-support systems.

Coach Jim Crakes at Point Loma College described Schnedar as "a great athlete, almost catlike." Track coach Dick Hill at San Diego State said he expected Schnedar to make the U.S. Olympic team and "he could have been a record setter."

Trial for motorcyclists

YOUBOU — Riders from Vancouver Island and the Lower Mainland are expected to compete in the Victoria Motorcycle Club's annual Widow Creek observed trial near here Sunday.

Action gets underway at 11:30 a.m. just past the mill site. In addition to individual competitions in expert, senior and novice classes, three-man club teams will be gunning for the Valvoline Trophy.

Eight Victorians on provincial team

Selectors Phil Green and Stuart Dixon have named the B.C. team to compete in the Ontario junior squash championships in Toronto April 25-27 and in the Canadian junior championships in Ottawa May 2-4.

Eight Victoria players were selected.

Richard Jackson, the Victoria player who badly sprained a leg in a fall in the Ottawa junior championships while trying out for Canada's team to the World Junior tournament in Sweden, heads the under-19 section of the B.C. squad. Jackson had his cast removed two weeks ago and is back playing again.

Others in the under-19 division are Sher Horne and Mike Montgomery of Victoria and Mark Heaney of Vancouver while the under-16 players are Bob Ballinger and John Crisp of Victoria and Paul Sutton of Vancouver.

John Dickie of Victoria and Tim Ferris of Vancouver are the under-14 members of the team.

Andrie Levey of Victoria heads the girls' under-19 squad and the others selected are Cathy Coverton of Vancouver and Debbie Jackson of Victoria.

Travelling with the team but not funded by the B.C. Squash Racquets Association are Victorians Mark Kuhn and Alistair Bland, both competing in the under-19 division.

Two Victoria players earn honors at development camp

A pair of husky, 18-year-old Victoria products were among the standouts at the B.C. Lions' football development camp that was completed Thursday in Vancouver.

Russ Hafter, a six-four, 185-pound Oak Bay High student, was voted the best defensive back by coaches sizing up provincial talent.

Jim Johnson, a six-three, 195-pound student at Reynolds, was selected as the outstanding offensive lineman at the camp.

Both are considering offers of football scholarships from Simon Fraser, UBC, Utah and Tulane University of Louisiana.

Hot-finishing Stadler leads

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Craig Stadler completed a three-under-par 69 with birdies on two of his last three holes and established a two-stroke lead Friday in the second round of the $250,000 Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament.

"Just kind of a mediocre round," Stadler said after posting his 36-hole total of 136, eight under par after two trips over the 6,984-yard Forest Oaks course.

Pat McGowan, playing in brisk afternoon winds and periodic showers, managed a 70 that put him in second place at 138.

Defending champion Ray Floyd, who once made birdie from the water, was in a five-way tie at 139.

"It was kind of like drawing to an inside straight," Floyd said after his spectacular birdie on the par-five, 13th hole. He drove into the water, dropped out, reached the green with a wood shot and holed a 30-footer. It initiated a string of three consecutive birdies that paved the way to his 69.

Jim Nelford of Burnaby slipped to a 74 after an opening round 70 for 144, eight strokes off the pace. Dave Barr of Kelowna missed the cutoff of 147 or better with a 151 total, including a 75 Friday.

Alcott flying high with eight birdies

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Amy Alcott, playing the best round of her career, shot a seven-under-par 65 Friday to move to a four-way tie for the lead midway through the $305,000 Winners Circle women's golf tournament.

Alcott had opened the tournament, the richest on the women's tour, with a 73. She carded eight birdies and one bogey during the second round for her 65 and a 36-hole total of 138, six-under-par.

Jane Blalock, with her second straight 69, was in the tie for the lead along with Pat Meyers and Donna Caponi Young — who each shot 67s Friday.

Nancy Lopez-Melton, at 141, and JoAnne Carner, at 143, two of the favorites for $37,500 first prize, remained in contention.

Alcott, 24, in her sixth year on the LPGA circuit was beaming after her fine round that tied a Winners Circle record of 65 set in 1979 by Sandra Post, who won this tournament the last two years. Post, a native of Oakville, Ont., had 79-70 — 149 so far in defence of her title.

Another Canadian, Cathy Sherk had a 74 Friday. Combined with her 79 on the opening day, Sherk has a total of 153 — 15 strokes back of the leaders.

Kabul ratifies invasion

United Press International

Afghanistan ratified an agreement Friday sanctioning its occupation by Soviet forces and Moscow accused the United States of supplying Afghan rebels with weapons including poison gas.

In Iran, President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr called on Pakistan to join an alliance with Tehran to force the Russians out of Afghanistan. But Ayatollah Khomeini, who also addressed a few words to the Russians Friday, sounded far softer on the subject of Afghanistan, thus calling the authority of Bani-Sadr's remarks into question.

Kabul Radio, monitored in London by the BBC, said the presidium of the Afghan Revolutionary Council approved an accord on "the conditions for the temporary stay of a limited Soviet military contingent on the territory of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan."

Ever since the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan on Christmas Day, Moscow has insisted that its forces are there only temporarily. It has also maintained that its presence in Afghanistan is "limited," even though western estimates put the number of Soviet troops at 80,000.

There was no immediate indication whether the accord approved by Kabul was merely using Moscow's language or whether it was an attempt to define or circumscribe the Soviet intervention.

Turning around recent charges by Washington that Soviet troops were using poison gas in Afghanistan, Moscow Radio accused the United States Friday of supplying poison gas that "affects human sight and actions" to the Islamic rebels fighting the Russian occupation.

The charge was contained in a Moscow Radio report broadcast in Persian and apparently intended to heard in Iran.

Bani-Sadr, in a television interview in Tehran, said Afghanistan's Moslem neighbors — Iran and Pakistan — should form a united front to oppose the Soviet intervention, which Iran has denounced several times before.

"Iran and Pakistan must adopt a united stand in the face of the superpowers' aims of hegemony. We can never lean on one superpower or the other in order to preserve out national independence," Bani-Sadr said.

Pope carries cross in Good Friday rite

Times News Services

ROME — Pope John Paul II carried the symbol of christianity through the ruins of pagan Rome Friday in a candlelit procession attended by 50,000 pilgrims commemorating the most solemn event of their religion.

For the second time in his reign, John Paul bore a wooden crucifix and led the Way of the Cross procession through ancient Rome to commemorate Good Friday.

Before doing so, he made papal history at the Vatican.

Disguising himself as a simple priest in black clerical robes, the leader of the world's 750 million Roman Catholics entered a confessional in St. Peter's Basilica and, for one hour and 35 minutes, heard the confessions of common people.

Symbolizing Christ's walk up Calvary hill in Jerusalem almost 2,000 years ago, the papal tradition of leading the Way of the Cross in Rome was begun by Pope Benedict in 1750 and taken up in modern times by Pope Paul VI in 1965.

Today, the Pope will preside over Easter vigil rites at St. Peter's and lead Roman Catholics into christianity's most joyous celebration marking Christ's Resurrection.

On Easter Sunday, the Pope will celebrate an open-air mass in St. Peter's Square, read his Easter message and give his blessing.

In Jerusalem, thousands made the solemn march through the narrow streets of the city Friday tracing Christ's route to crucifixion on Calvary Hill.

Because both the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox celebrations of Easter fall on the same day this year, there is a heavier than usual flow of Pilgrims into the walled city.

Meanwhile, in Southfield, Mich., American atheists convened their 10th national assessment gathering Friday disturbed by the recent resurgence of organized religion in America.

The national atheists' group was founded by Madalyn Murray O'Hair on the heels of her 1963 victory in the U.S. Supreme Court over forced prayer in public schools.

Chocolate bunny was really a bare

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AFP) — A young woman paraded in a chocolate-layered Easter outfit Friday — but sweets were not enough to seduce the man she was after.

After his complaint, police arrived at the man's home and saw the woman hopping through the backyard like a rabbit, wearing nothing but chocolate.

After a brief struggle, the chocolate rabbit, whose identity was not disclosed, was overcome. She is spending the rest of the Easter weekend under psychiatric examination, police said.

Another cottage torched

CAERNARVON (Reuter) — Fire destroyed a cottage in north Wales Friday night in the latest of a series of arson attacks on English-owned vacation homes.

Police said a man has been arrested and will be charged with arson.

The cottage in the scenic Snowdonia area went up in flames only hours before two men appeared briefly in court to be charged with arson in connection with a similar fire the previous night.

More than 30 English vacation homes have been burned down in Wales in the last three months, but no one has been hurt.

No group has so far claimed responsibility for the attacks, but an underground organization calling itself Cadwyr Cymru (Keepers of Wales) has sent letters to the media claiming links with Basque separatists and the Irish Republican Army.

Extremist groups are believed to be motivated by Welsh anger at what is seen as English economic exploitation of Wales.

The economic depression in Wales has led to the purchase of empty cottages and houses by wealthy English people as second homes.

White-area police office raided

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Black guerrillas launched their first attack on a police station in a white urban area of South Africa Friday with automatic weapons fire, rockets and grenades. There were only two policemen in the station, two kilometres from downtown Johannesburg, and no injuries were reported.

Several houses around the station also were hit by the insurgents' fire.

Witnesses said the attack lasted more than five minutes with the two policemen firing back with their service revolvers. One white resident of the area, Boysens, is reported to have chased the guerrillas, firing his gun at their van.

Police said there were up to 11 insurgents, possibly the biggest concentration of guerrillas yet in an urban action here.

The attack started a fire in the upper storey of the police station, and the building's lunch room was heavily damaged. But police said they were able to return to their normal duties within two hours.

A shopkeeper, whose house is adjacent to the station, said he woke up to the sound of automatic weapons fire as shots whistled past his house. A bullet smashed through the front-door window and ricocheted through the hallway.

As the guerrillas sped away they tossed Marxist pamphlets from their van, some of which demanded the release of black nationalist Walter Sisulu.

Sisulu was imprisoned 16 years ago with Nelson Mandela, leader of the banned African National Congress, which seeks to overthrow this country's white-minority government.

Gypsies raise row at Dachau

DACHAU — Gypsy survivors of Nazi concentration camps began a hunger strike at the Dachau camp museum Friday to dramatize charges of official discrimination in West Germany.

Romani Rose, spokesman of the 30,000-member German gypsy community, said the hunger strikers sought financial compensation for Nazi persecution and an end to mistreatment.

Twelve gypsies, including several former death camp inmates, said they would only drink water or coffee until authorities acted on their plea.

Dachau was reconstructed as a museum after the Second World War, complete with inmates' huts and gas chambers, to remind of the suffering in the Third Reich.

Some 500,000 gypsies from Germany and Nazi-occupied countries perished in the Nazi death camps, where six million Jews and several million others also died.

Jewish Student Union chairman Thomas Muenz said at the service German history teaching should underline the plight of the gypsies "to put an end to public ignorance".

Rose said he and the other hunger strikers wanted Nazi police files on gypsies obliterated. He said the files, written along the lines of Nazi race philosophy, were still used by West German officaldom.

Rose said 13 members of his own family were murdered by the Nazis. As an example of the discriminatory official reports, Rose cited a file on his family saying the Roses were "wandering through the territory of the Reich, living off robbery and thievery."

West Germany paid millions of dollars in reparation to the state of Israel and to Jews who suffered under Hitler. Gypsies had not been treated with equal justice, Rose said.

Wax sculptor pares Gary Gilmore as Charles Manson bust stares in foreground

Madame Tussaud's bows to demands for more gore

LONDON (AP) — The public wants more blood, says Madame Tussaud's. So today London's famed wax museum opened a new Chamber of Horrors that is the most gory, ghoulish and gruesome in its 178-year history.

For the first time, modern U.S. murderers are displayed — Utah killer Gary Gilmore before the firing squad, Charles Manson with his gang of girls and Bruno Richard Hauptmann strapped into the electric chair.

For the devotees of London crime, a Victorian alleyway is littered with the victims of Jack the Ripper and other madmen.

"We were very aware that visitors were disappointed with the old Chamber of Horrors, that it wasn't frightening," spokesman Juliet Simpkin said. "People were just not finding it bloody enough."

The 40 murderers, murders and murdering tools are appropriately located in the basement of the museum whose wax look-a-likes of the famous and infamous attract 2.5 million visitors a year.

When Marie Gresholtz Tussaud, a Swiss-French wax artist, brought her collection to England in 1802, she put the more horrible items — including the blade from the French Revolution guillotine — into a separate room. In 1846, Punch, the British humor magazine, dubbed it the Chamber of Horrors, and the name stuck.

Into the chamber went likenesses of Britain's most notorious criminals almost as soon as they were hanged. More than 30,000 lined up for the debut of Eleanor Pearcey, who slew her lover's wife and baby and wheeled them through the streets in a pram.

But capital punishment was abolished in Britain in 1965, and the Chamber of Horrors grew stale. Attendance dropped off. Both adults and children complained to the guards that they wanted to see "more murders being done and people's heads severed."

In the new Chamber of Horrors, previewed for The Associated Press earlier this week, the execution bell from Newgate Prison rings every 20 seconds as visitors walk down the dimly lit stairs. The air chills as a dark 19th-century London street comes into view. Laughter and the clink of glasses are heard from The Ten Bells pub to the right. A prostitute beckons from the left.

A scream rings out, and a bloodied body is seen. The shadowy figure of Jack the Ripper flees from his latest victim.

Hostage transfer shot down again

TEHRAN (CP) — The Islamic Republican party, the strongest force in the Revolutionary Council, said today the U.S. hostages should remain in the hands of the militants, seriously damaging chances of transferring the hostages to government control.

The party said in a statement in its official party organ, Jomhori Eslami: "Our position is clear and decisive — we think the hostages should remain in the hands of the students."

The party is known to command a majority of the Revolutionary Council which postponed a decision to take over custody of the hostages Thursday.

The council demanded further clarification from U.S. President Carter of his position on conditions laid down by Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr before the hostage transfer would take place.

Carter has so far refused to go beyond what he has already said publicly on the issue. He has said Bani-Sadr's offer to take control of the hostages is a "positive development" and he has promised to defer sanctions against Iran.

On Friday, a member of the ruling Revolutionary Council said that Iran would disrupt the Persian Gulf region if the United States imposed new sanctions should the government fail to take charge of the hostages.

Hojatoleslam Mohammed Ali Khamene'i told a mass prayer rally at Tehran University: "We can set the region alight with the cries of our oppression."

He added that Western Europe and the U.S. could be deprived of oil from the gulf region if the Americans tried to starve Iran.

With the latest Islamic Republican party pronouncement chances of a transfer are further dimmed.

The party stressed the hostage issue is closely linked to the extradition of the deposed shah to Iran to face trial on his alleged crimes.

Carter is "extremely worried about putting the hostages on trial" and seeing the shah tried on his alleged crimes because it would appear to be a trial of the superpowers in the eyes of the Third World, the party said.

The Islamic Republican party said the U.S. now is trying to trick Iran into giving up the hostages.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Khomeini has said the hostage issue must be settled by the Iranian parliament, the party stated.

Meanwhile, Easter presents for the U.S. hostages were collected and delivered to the U.S. embassy today by foreign embassies in Tehran.

And Syrian Catholic Archbishop Hilarian Capudji, a guest of the Iranian foreign ministry, arrived in Tehran for a meeting with student representatives to prepare details of an Easter Sunday service for the hostages.

Rev. Alfred Picchioni, Roman Catholic priest at Tehran's Consolata Church, said he and Rev. Hannibal Bugnini, Vatican representative here, gathered presents of fruit, chocolates, shirts and other things for the hostages from foreign embassies.

The Vatican representative handed the presents over to the students in a big reception hall at the embassy and "they (the students) were very kind to us."

Three American clergymen were also on their way to Iran today to offer Easter servicesrfor the hostages.

Before leaving New York, two of the clergymen criticized President Carter's handling of the 154-day-old crisis, saying the United States should admit aiding in the alleged crimes of the shah and that the ousted monarch should be returned.

Another giant tanker sinks

LONDON (AP) — A second Liberian-registered supertanker sank off the coast of Africa within a 24-hour period, Lloyd's Register of Shipping reported Friday, bringing to four the number of big oil tankers to sink in African waters this year.

Lloyd's reported the latest ship to go down was the 238,889-ton Mycene, owned by the Mycene Shipping Co. of Monrovia, which sank Thursday off the coast of Senegal, Africa's westernmost point.

One crew member was said to be missing and 32 rescued by a Dutch ship, said Lloyd's shipping information service.

The accident came 24 hours after another Liberian supertanker, the 239,410-ton Albahaa B, owned by Wellem Ship Management Ltd. of Hong Kong, exploded and sank off Africa's east coast near Tanzania.

In that accident, six crew were missing and 37 picked up by a ship headed for Durban, South Africa, where it was due April 9.

The Mycene, built in 1975, and the Albahaa B, built in 1971, were both in ballast and heading for the Persian Gulf after delivering full cargoes of oil, Lloyd's said.

The Mycene was sailing from Genoa, Italy, and the Albahaa B from South Africa.

On March 11, the 236,000-ton Spanish supertanker Maria Alejandra, exploded and sank off Mauritania, West Africa, with 36 of the 43 persons on board lost. It was reported to have sunk in less than a minute. It, too, was in ballast and was only three years old with modern safety equipment.

In January, the 215,000-ton Liberian-registered tanker, Salem, sank in the same part of the Atlantic in mysterious circumstances still under investigation.

Guerrillas free 2 more

BOGOTA (AP) — Leftist guerrillas, fulfilling a Holy Week pledge, freed two more non-diplomats from the [illegible]upied Dominican Republic Embassy on Good Friday, but there was no sign of a quick release for the 19 diplomats, now in their 39th day of captivity.

Any man who gets elected to the B.C. legislature must be considered a full-grown, bull politician, capable of looking after himself. Right?

And any politician who makes a statement, not once but three times, must expect to stand by that statement. Right?

Also if he makes that statement to a group of reporters waving microphones and notebooks he can expect to have his words repeated on the air and in print. Right?

Then why do we all feel guilty about reporting the dumb remarks made by Socred MLA Bill Ritchie?

Ritchie, you may recall, was accused of influence-peddling last year, underwent an RCMP investigation, was pronounced pure and wholesome and then got dumped on again.

RCMP and Crown counsel said they had actually recommended charges be laid. The decision against charging Ritchie was made by associate deputy attorney-general Neil McDiarmid.

Attorney-General Allan Williams has been forced to defend that decision in the legislature. He has consistently argued that McDiarmid acted properly and Ritchie received no special treatment.

Now Ritchie confides to reporters: "If I was at the mercy of the RCMP and/or the prosecutor, I wouldn't be in politics. I wouldn't be in public life."

He goes on to say: "If I did not have the sort of protection that there is through the attorney-general's department, then I would not be in public life."

Was he actually admitting he was given protection by the attorney-general's ministry — exactly what Williams has been denying?

The press tried to be kind. They asked Ritchie to explain what he meant. All he did was repeat his statements.

The reporters left, shaking their heads, and did their job.

So why did it feel like kicking a puppy or stealing candy from a baby?

The NDP, of course, leaped on Ritchie's statement with glad cries.

"It's just what we've been saying all along," they gloated.

Alex Macdonald lost no time in calling for a special committee on privileges to consider whether Ritchie is entitled to sit in the legislature, by reason of his "admission."

The blue-eyed, red-faced member from Central Fraser Valley decided not to comment on that development. But by then, of course, it was far too late to be discreet.

One of Premier Bennett's back-room boys has just been given a full ministerial office suite in the Legislative Buildings where office space is even scarcer than common sense.

David Brown has just moved into the first floor offices vacated last week by Environment Minister Stephen Rogers who has shuffled off to new quarters in the basement.

In the buttoned-down world of bureaucrats, one's importance is measured by the luxury of one's office.

The wider desk, the plusher carpet, the grander view from the greater number of windows — these mark the ranks of officialdom.

With his own private washroom, Brown has just become the most important civil servant in the province.

Brown, a balding, brolly-toting, British-born bureaucrat has been nesting in the premier's office since Bill Bennett first came to power. One of the wheels within wheels. His title: communications consultant to the executive council.

That translates as super-flack for the government.

Last November, in a fit of house-cleaning sparked by his cabinet shuffle, Bennett announced Brown would be leaving his personal staff and joining the ministry of the provincial secretary.

The title would remain the same.

It has taken more than four months to get Brown out of the nest. The exercise has not been without trauma. At one point he resigned. Then he un-resigned. What made him change his mind?

It wasn't the promise of a private washroom.

Brown, according to corridor gossip, is on his way up. He will be rising to the top of the public service heap as if he were filled with helium.

The target apparently is the position of deputy provincial secretary, which will open up when Gerald Cross takes early retirement in October.

Brown's first step will be to shed his political skin and gain credibility as a civil servant.

That shouldn't be too difficult. He has shown himself to be an effective administrator when he isn't taking time out to design Socred advertising campaigns.

In the past four years he has modernized the government printing service and brought at least a semblance of order to the government information services.

Within a month or two, Brown likely will be made an associate deputy minister responsible for communications.

Soon after Cross steps down, the diffident Englishman will step in.

His office won't be as nice as the one he now has, but he'll be wielding a great deal of power.

Power is more attractive to bureaucrats even than private washrooms.

That's the plan. But there is a black cloud looming over the horizon for Mr. Brown.

Laurie Wallace comes back from England later this month to become Premier Bennett's new Super-Deputy. As a long-time civil servant and a man who held the job of Dep Prov Sec with distinction, Wallace has little love for political upstarts taking shortcuts through the public service.

It won't be long before Wallace and Brown tangle.

Super-Deputy meets Super-Flack.

Gladys Prior used to have faith in the people's insurance company

After a jolt, the ICBC jungle

It took a lawyer to penetrate

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Do you believe that as long as you drive your car carefully and obey the laws of the road, your interests will be well protected by your friendly Insurance Corporation of B.C.?

Gladys Prior used to.

On Feb. 5, as she was driving east on Finlayson and crossing Cook Street, an oncoming vehicle suddenly turned left and hit her car head-on.

She suffered a huge bruise to her head and was later x-rayed at a hospital.

"But I wasn't cracked," she joked as she told the Times her story in her Mayfair Drive apartment, surrounded by the landscapes she used to paint.

The sale of her art used to constitute a significant part of her income but she hasn't been able to concentrate on her work since the accident and her ICBC woes.

In the days immediately after the crash, Prior was confident she'd come out of the ordeal at least as well off as before, her faith strengthened by the knowledge that all blame had been assessed against the other driver.

She later came to believe her trust had been seriously misplaced.

Her 1970 Toyota Mark II was a writeoff. It had only 52,000 miles on it and Prior believes in taking good care of anything she owns.

She was told by four dealers that replacing the car would cost between $1,400 and $1,800.

The people's insurance corporation offered her $800.

Not one to accept just anything, Prior argued the point until ICBC upped its offer to $1,248.

It still wasn't enough to replace the car but arguing with ICBC brass was intensifying the headaches that were recurring regularly since the accident.

On March 4, she bought a 1976 Dodge Dart in a private deal for $4,100.

Prior arranged ICBC coverage and had a spare set of keys made. The next day she took it to her mechanic in the Point Ellice bridge area for an oil change, lubrication and wheel alignment.

She had a premonition — "I've learned to follow my hunches" — and she pointedly told the mechanic on two occasions not to leave the keys in the car. On one occasion, she had a witness, a friend waiting to give her a lift.

The next day, March 6, Prior went to get her car. The mechanic was just starting the oil change and he said he was going to take it for the wheel alignment.

That same evening he left the car at a major dealership on Douglas — with the keys in the ignition.

At about 1:30 p.m. the next day, the mechanic went to retrieve the car.

It had been stolen.

The dealership denied any knowledge of the car ever having been there.

It was at this point Prior learned ICBC doesn't supply a car for a person whose car has been stolen until 72 hours after it's been reported stolen.

At 3 a.m., March 24, Prior's phone rang. Esquimalt police had found her car on the Gorge Hotel parking lot, locked and the keys missing.

The police had the car towed away and Prior was told it wasn't checked for fingerprints as there are too many such thefts.

When she finally retrieved the car, she found a bottle of nail polish inside. The odometer indicated the car had travelled 27 miles.

The insurance papers were still in the car and Prior realized the thieves not only had a set of keys; they knew where she lived.

Would ICBC pay to have the locks changed?

No.

If the car was stolen again and the locks hadn't been changed, would ICBC pay a claim?

No.

Catch 22.

On March 25, only a day after Prior's car had been recovered amd before she'd had a chance to get the locks changed, an ICBC official was on the phone telling her they wouldn't pay another day on the rental car.

Prior explained she had only 1½ hours before having to report to her job at Sears, and because she was facing a long shift, it was also necessary to have a good lunch.

Unmoved, her friendly neighborhood ICBC man insisted she return her car.

Prior's lawyer told her to keep the rental vehicle until the locks on her own car were changed.

He said they'd go after ICBC later.

On Wednesday ICBC coughed up $445.87, which including a $150 legal fee, the cost of changing the car locks and a copy of the car-buyer's guide, Lemon-Aid.

The questions remain: why did a blameless driver who thought she was paying for complete coverage have to spend hours on the telephone arguing with ICBC officials?

And why was the lawyer, armed with exactly the same information as Prior, able to accomplish what she couldn't?

'Citizens are asking for a second look'

Blencoe to seek delay on centre

By AL FORREST

Ald. Robin Blencoe said today he will ask council to delay approval of the convention centre to give the public a chance to say whether it wants the structure built on the waterfront.

"After seeing the design I am concerned that we might ruin our waterfront for all time with a mass of concrete like that.

"I am being inundated with calls from citizens asking for a second look."

Mayor Bill Tindall today expressed exasperation at the report.

"We have been trying for 80 years to get this convention centre and every time we get close, something knocks it off the rails," the mayor said.

"I am satisfied with the waterfront site. There will be further discussion by council on the design."

The issue comes to a head Thursday night when council will be asked to approve a development permit.

The permit, if approved, would give the city the clout to get some design concessions from the provincial government. However, the site would be settled.

Tindall said that two years ago a thorough study was made of three possible sites, two on the waterfront. The Reid site was selected over the Ocean Cement location. The third one considered and discarded was on Douglas at the site of the former steam laundry beside the Crystal Garden.

Tindall said that while design is still an open question he felt the city has had an ample opportunity to discuss the waterfront location.

But Blencoe today said approval in principle by the city was given without any knowledge of what the building would look like.

"We've all been kept in the dark about the design. I think they were afraid there would be opposition when we saw what it looked like."

Those who kept the design a secret, he said, were the members of the Pan Pacific group, a collection of local businessmen who are most anxious to get the convention centre built.

"Their membership reads like a who's who of the business community. I think we need input from other groups on this important issue."

Blencoe said he will take the following actions:

At Thursday night's council meeting he will ask that the request for a development permit be tabled.

Second, he will urge the city to find out where the citizens want the convention centre.

Third, he will ask for community input into the design and not leave the question to the Pan Pacific group, which, he said, represents only the business community.

And fourth, if the citizens agree the convention centre should be built on the waterfront, he will ask for more green space in the design.

"The waterfront is the most important asset we have. We must be careful not to ruin it."

Feed those meters

Easter Monday is a holiday for civic, provincial and federal government employees but the men who man Victoria's parking meters will be on the job.

City manager Jim Bramley said that because the major department stores and most businesses will be open Monday, it will be considered a regular weekday under parking regulations.

Motorists will have to feed the meter or face a $3 parking ticket.

Statutory holidays are usually treated as Sundays, when no commissionaires are on duty.

Fleet blessing set for Sunday

The Inner Harbor will be wall-to-wall fishing boats Sunday for the annual Blessing of the Fleet ceremonies.

The blessing was first organized in Victoria in 1974 by the Pacific Trollers Association.

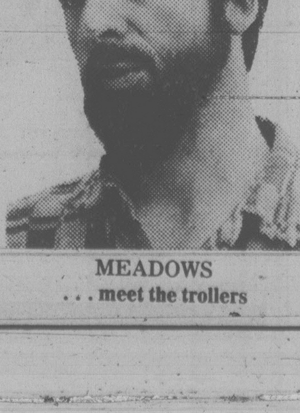
Al Meadows, one of the organizers of Sunday's ceremonies, says apart from the blessing the event is important because it gives people a chance to meet the trollers who are mostly unknown in the community because they work in the open Pacific.

The 2 p.m. ceremony will be opened by Mayor Bill Tindall and the blessing will be given by Father R.C. Crawley and Father P.H. Hanley.

The Naden band will parade along Government Street from the Legislative Buildings and provide musical accompaniment for the ceremonies and hymns.

About a dozen boats will be open to the public and another 30 to 50 are expected to be on hand for the ceremonies.

The open boat portion will allow visitors to see the various types of boats and equipment used.



MEADOWS
. . . meet the trollers

Freezer trollers will have their freezers operating, there will be various sizes of ice-packing trollers and one or two day boats.

Also open to the public will be the fisheries patrol vessel Howay and the Canadian Coast Guard cutter Racer.

Fishing techniques, trip lengths and fishing patterns will be explained. Electronic navigation and fish-finding equipment will also be demonstrated.

Local sports fishermen will be able to examine gear-tying displays and for those who just like to eat fish there will be a free draw for fish that trollers catch.

The salmon season opens April 15.

The blessing of individual ships and fleets is an ancient tradition. It was described by Homer and practised by most seafaring nations long before the rise of Christianity.

New Orleans and San Francisco are two other cities where such ceremonies are major annual events.

IODE becoming endangered species?

FREDERICTON (CP) — The Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire is becoming an endangered species in the province of its birth.

Declining numbers have forced one division, the Lt.-Col. Boyd Anderson chapter, to shut down after 60 years of service.

"We tried to think of everything we could to save it," said the chapter's last regent, Mrs. J. W. Pincombe, "but I guess it was a matter of too little, too late."

She said chapter members were growing older, with none under the age of 50, many in their 70s and some in their 80s and even 90s.

Mrs. K.R. Blauveldt, provincial IODE president, said more women are employed these days and have less leisure time to devote to the cause.

"I think you'll find the younger women today more involved in sports and self improvement courses," she said. "They seem more interested in athletic activities."

The IODE has 18,000 members in Canada.

Mrs. R.S. Ford, regent of the Dr. John Clarence Webster chapter, said the IODE is suffering from image problems.

"Our image is too staid. We're still thought of as wearing hats and white gloves and being involved in a snobby kind of thing. Young women think the IODE is something their grandmothers were part of."

Mrs. Blauveldt said the idea of service in the community is still essential and that cuts in government financial aid have made service in many fields necessary, especially in education.

IODE members in New Brunswick raise and spend more than $40,000 a year for the benefit of students at all levels. The club awards scholarships to outstanding students and gives bursaries, loans and grants to needy ones.

It also helps people with food hampers, clothing, bedding and gifts at Christmas. Books are sent to hospitals and nursing homes and equipment donated to hospitals.

The IODE performs other work such as welcoming new Canadians at citizenship court.

The organization was started in 1900 by Mrs. Clark Murray following a visit to England. It was intended to foster a bond among women and children of the British Empire and enable them to make some contribution to the Boer War effort.

PAW OF FRIENDSHIP: Fleecy, a resident of the Edmonton branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, reaches out to three-year-old Sabrina Payea of Smith, Alta., who was touring the facility with her parents.

Baby bottle poses threat to tiny teeth

CALGARY (CP) — Add another worry for new parents: the baby bottle syndrome.

Also called baby bottle caries, it's a tooth infection that often occurs when a baby is put to sleep with a bottle of juice or milk.

Dr. David MacLean, a Calgary dentist, describes it this way:

The saliva stops flowing when the child falls asleep and the juice or milk, both of which contain sugar, pools around the upper teeth.

If the child has a bottle of milk or juice every time he naps or goes to bed, the sugar can cause rapid decay and infection.

MacLean said most people are unaware of the danger.

"They leave their child with a bottle because they don't realize the risk. I tell the patients I see who are going to have children to avoid this habit, but it's something they do without thinking.

"The child sleeps better when he is put down with a drink."

Children get their primary teeth when they are six months to a year old.

If they have always been given a bottle to lull them to sleep, the teeth can start to decay the moment they break through the gums, MacLean said. If the parents take the child to the dentist as soon as they see the decay, the teeth can often be saved with fillings, just as an adult's are.

Unfortunately, MacLean said, many wait until it's too late.

"Some bring the child in as soon as they see it, others wait until it has reached the critical stage. Usually by the time we see them, the teeth have to be extracted.

"Often parents don't want to admit they give their child a bottle. If he's four years old, for example, it makes the child seem like a baby. The hardest thing is to get the parents to stop the habit."

Baby bottle syndrome doesn't always cause a great deal of pain at first, which explains why parents are not aware of the problem, MacLean said.

"It depends on the individual child. Some have more resistance to dental decay than others. Often the body will adapt itself to the infection."

When the decay is extensive the teeth must be extracted, and although it's not an expensive procedure it can lead to trouble.

Dear Abby:

I'm 16 and pregnant by a married man. (I'll call him Donny). When we fell in love, Donny said he was separated from his wife but his divorce was coming through "any day," and then we'd be married, so I really wanted to have his baby.

I just found out that Donny is still living with his wife, and there is no divorce in the works. Abby, I never knew love could turn to hate so fast. I'm five months along and now it's too late for an abortion. I don't want to keep this baby now, and I never want to see Donny again.

Donny's wife called me and said she was sorry I was in such a mess. Then she asked if I would let her and Donny have my baby. She said they would pay all my expenses and I could go on with my life like nothing happened.

What do you think of the idea, Abby?

Messed Up At 16

Dear Messed:

You say you don't want to keep the baby and you don't want to be involved with Donny any more. A wise decision. Feeling as you do, contact a licensed adoption agency. If you give your child to Donny and his wife, you can expect to be involved with Donny forever.

Dear Abby:

Four months ago a co-worker fixed me up with her brother (I'll call him Sam), who lost his wife about a year before. I'm a 56-year-old divorcee. Well, Sam and I hit it off beautifully. He's 62, very attractive and has no financial worries.

We have a wonderful time together. I especially appreciate Sam's patient, gentlemanly behavior. Almost every other man I've dated since my divorce has tried to rush me into bed after the first date. Sam never tried to go beyond a goodnight kiss.

Sam's sister told me yesterday that Sam is really crazy about me and would ask me to marry him tomorrow, but surgery he had six years ago ended his sex life.

How can I let Sam know that I don't give a hoot about that?

Capricorn

Dear Cap.:

Tell Sam's sister.

Dear Abby:

A minister wrote to say how easy it was for him to get into the homes of total strangers and urged you to warn readers to be more careful. His letter prompts this response:

Ten years ago we invited the public to purchase paper products directly from our company, which is a wholesale distribution concern.

We accepted personal and company cheques with no demand to verify identification. Over a 10-year period, we processed over 150,000 cheques of which only 14 were no good. (Our total loss was less than $300).

What a shame that the news media report only on this small percentage of dishonest people.

Businessman

Dear Businessman:

It's not "news" when people obey the law, love one another and live happily ever after. Crime, corruption, violence and misfortune are news.

Abby welcomes your letters. Write c/o Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4. Remember to enclose self-addressed stamped envelope for her personal reply.

Diet may be the right idea but not for wrong reason

TORONTO (CP) — Too many Canadians are adopting fad diets, most of them without knowing it, a symposium on nutrition was told.

Dr. Harvey Anderson of the department of nutrition and food science at the University of Toronto also said fear has become a powerful, overriding factor in food selection.

"More and more of us are selecting a diet for the wrong reasons. For example, because we've been told that diet is related to such disorders as heart disease, we're giving up eggs which are good sources of protein and other essential nutrients.

"We're also cutting back on other dairy products such as whole milk. On the other hand, margarine sales have skyrocketed 600 per cent in just a few years because we think margarine will keep us from having a heart attack."

Anderson challenged one of the basic premises underlying dietary goals of a federal government committee on heart disease.

"In the past five years many countries, including Canada, have arrived at the conclusion that we've been eating all the wrong foods and that it is time to change the eating habits of the population.

"As a result, dietary goals have been formulated and have become the basis of nutrition education programs and have influenced food regulations."

He said that the underlying premise of these goals is that if individuals adhere to the recommendations, they will live longer and be free of chronic disease.

"This implies that the Canadian diet has deteriorated over the past 40 to 50 years," Anderson said. "Yet, on the basis of data followed since 1940, there is little evidence for this view."

He said that mortality from some diseases, including cardiovascular disease, has declined by almost 30 per cent in the 35-to-74 age bracket since 1958.

"We don't know what made heart disease go up in the first place and we sure don't know what made it go down."

Nathan J. Smith, director of sports medicine at the University of Washington in Seattle, said many top athletes aren't performing to their potential because of poor dietary practice.

Smith, also author of the book Food for Sport, told the symposium that the food young athletes select for various sport performances is a significant concern because dietary practice can effect energy levels and body composition.

He was critical of certain weight-control programs for young wrestlers as well as weight-gain programs for young football players.

"A well-planned weight control program should be provided for the aspiring young wrestler so that dietary practices currently in vogue and used by some athletes and trainers, such as starvation, dehydration, drug doping and other abuses, can be avoided."

He said such practices may be stunting the growth of up to 200,000 U.S. high school boys during the wrestling season.

Adoptive mothers lose out on UIC

TORONTO (CP) — Several appeals have failed to persuade the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to allow adoptive mothers of infants to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, even though natural mothers can receive full benefits.

Roger White, public affairs officer for the commission, said that claims involving "the eligibility of adoptive mothers for benefits come up often."

White said he knows of six cases that have been rejected recently at the appeals level. He said that under existing rules, the only way mothers can claim maternity leave is to provide proof of pregnancy, which "automatically excludes adoptive mothers."

Hypnosis accepted stutter treatment

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

When my 10-year-old boy becomes upset, he begins to stammer. With strangers, especially, and even with close relatives, this often happens. Once he becomes embarrassed, the stammering gets worse. Could this be cured by hypnosis? I read an advertisement that said that this is true.

Mrs. W.T.

Dear Mrs. T.:

The word stammering seems to be leaving the medical literature entirely. In essence, stuttering is a disorder of the regular smooth pattern of breathing on which normal speech depends. This is a marked simplification of a problem which has many ramifications and complexities. Stuttering has some neurological, physical and deep-seated psychological origins.

The art and science of modern speech therapy has produced innumerable techniques by which stuttering can be modified, temporarily stopped and even permanently stopped. It is particularly interesting that when a stutterer sings or shouts, the condition temporarily disappears. Sometimes when a stutterer is wearing heavy headphones over the ears, the stuttering is definitely lessened. In a complicated way, not hearing his own voice will reduce the confusion of sound feedback.

Hypnosis is accepted as one of the important methods of treating stutterers. Yet the ideal approach to such an important problem is to first rule out the possible existence of some underlying physical condition.

If none is present, then a complete battery of psychological tests should be done in order to uncover emotional problems that may not be apparent. This should be done as soon as parents become aware of a persistent speech problem. For delay in tracking down the cause serves to intensify the condition. If a psychological problem does exist, it should be treated intensively. This, in combination with well-established methods used by speech therapists, can give your son a greater sense of security and help him to overcome this embarrassing speech disorder.

Dear Doctor:

Only occasionally do I see blood in my stool. Even though it occurs rarely, I worry about it.

Miss N.N.

Dear Miss N.:

Occasional specks of bright red blood simply mean that a small blood vessel might have broken during straining at stool. In most instances it may originate from a small fissure or from a pile, or hemorrhoid.

Even though this seems to be insignificant, since it does cause you worry, you should have a rectal examination. Only in this way can you be sure that no important underlying condition is overlooked. The relief you will get from anxiety is worth the investment in a good physical examination.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of the Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

SHAPE UP FOR SPRING WITH THE HELP OF THE no nonsense DIET

In May of 1979 Natures own no nonsense diet was introduced to British Columbians and Albertans through the Prince Health Food chain. Within weeks they were sold out and by the end of July thousands of people had lost weight the no nonsense way.

Unlike most diets to have come along this one is not dying out, but gaining greater momentum all the time. The reason for this phenomenal growth lies in the fact that those people who have tried the diet have gotten positive results. For example I know of one particular young lady who has been overweight nearly all of her life. She wanted desperately to lose 25 lbs., and tried every possible means over the last two years. She exercised, joined clubs and went to monthly meetings. All to no avail. After reading about the no nonsense diet, she decided to give it a try before throwing in the towel. It worked. Within a month she lost 23 lbs., within two more weeks she lost another 10 lbs. She is so ecstatic about this diet that she preaches it to anyone who will listen and has most of her friends on it.

The product is a dieter's dream; two tablespoons in a glass of partially skimmed milk is equal in nutrition to a complete meal. But without all those nasty little calories. It has all the essential amino acids, and Vitamins and Minerals in a delicious powder base. The no nonsense formula comes in two flavours, luscious chocolate and tasty vanilla.

Here is a list of the Vitamins and Minerals it contains:

Vitamin A
Thiamin
Choline
Iodine
Potassium
Vitamin E
Riboflavin
Calcium Magnesium
Manganese
Vitamin C
Niacin B6, B12
Phosphorous
Copper
Sodium
Vitamin D
Folid Acid Blotin
Iron
Zinc
d-Panothenic Acid

This is a wonderful diet because you are dealing with natural foods and not drugs, consequently it is safe and very healthy. A lot of people after going on this diet, have noticed remarkable improvement in their hair, skin and nails.

The no nonsense diet is available at these and other leading dealers:

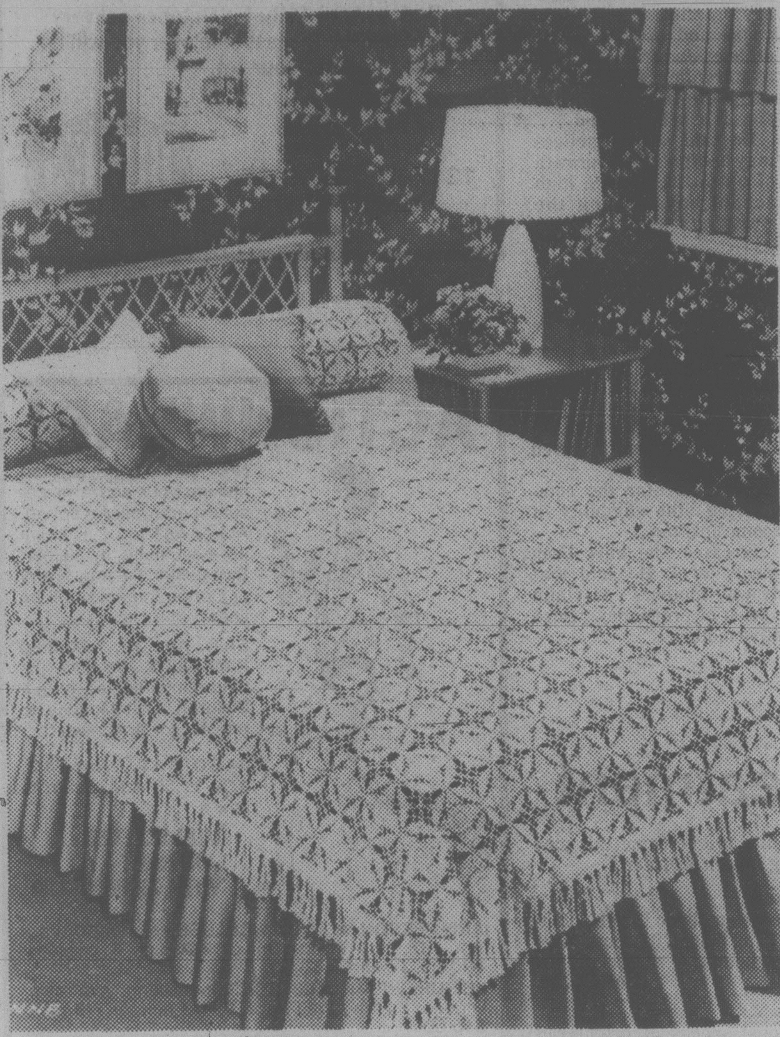
The noble Coolidge counterpane

knit and chat



Work up the squares and you get an attractive bedspread

By MAY MacLEAN

A few weeks ago I gave ideas and suggestions for knitting and crochet with cotton that will help pass away the evenings.

I have received quite a number of letters from ladies who would like to know if I have any knitted doilies or other knitted bedspread patterns.

I have a particular favorite which is quite an old pattern. In fact it has been handed down as Mrs. Coolidge's Great-Grandmother's Counterpane. Calvin Coolidge was President of the U.S. from 1923 to 1929.

The instructions have the old-fashioned terminology and you should know the abbreviation "n" means narrow or knit two stitches together, while "s & b" is slip and bind, or as we say today, slip one, knit one, pass the slipped stitch over.

The counterpane is an extremely attractive pattern, but not one that I would recommend to other than an experienced knitter. This design is knitted in squares so it is easily portable if you are travelling. The Leaflet No. is 6949 and it is knitted with cotton.

Leaflet No. 6947 is a knitted lace centrepiece consisting of five large doilies about eight inches in diameter which are joined to form a circle, with a smaller six-inch doiley to fill in the centre. If knitted with South Maid or Cronita and a size 11 or 12 needle, these larger doilies would make attractive place mats. An ideal gift for the June bride.

No. 7662 Coronet is an attractive knitted doiley pattern, and No. 7663 Maytime is another pretty doiley.

If you enjoy knitting with cotton like I do, perhaps you should think about knitting an edging for a tablecloth, or for the turn back of the top sheet and around the pillowcases. The trend now is back to nostalgia. Lace edge sheets and pillowcases look so eminine and remind one of the Victorian era.

You can find edging instructions on any baby shawl pattern. Use the metal sock needles with the cotton because usually there are so few stitches to an edging. For a normal size tablecloth choose an edging which will give you between two and three inches extra depth, but if you are planning a banquet size cloth a deeper edging will look more balanced—I would say at least four inches.

I make the tablecloths from wash-and-wear sheets. The material is ideal, the price is right, and from one single sheet I can cut a 72- inch round tablecloth and have plenty of material left to make six good size serviettes!

This week's pattern is another idea for the stay-at-home evenings. But this time the squares are crochet. Easily and quickly made, the squares are then fashioned into this attractive bedspread.

Perhaps you have a daughter or favorite niece getting married come June, so why not make a treasured heirloom that she can hand down to her daughter.

To order Leaflet No. 7568 or any other pattern mentioned, send 75 cents for each, plus a stamped self-addressed return envelope, long one if possible. If you do not have a stamp or envelope, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover the cost of handling and print your name and address.

Send to: May E. MacLean, KNIT & CHAT, 486 Montford Ave., Dollard des Ormeaux, Quebec, H9G 1M6.

Please be sure to state pattern numbers correctly when ordering and to enclose your envelope for faster service. All back numbers of my series are available for 75 cents each. Catalogues of bazaar and gift ideas are 25 cents, plus a stamped return envelope.

Where can I have an antique mirror resilvered, she asked? Don't resilver if you want to maintain antique value. You could press foil onto the back of spots without silver. Or, you could have a thin new mirror cut for the frame and put in front (or back) of the old mirror. A glass repair shop should know where to take a mirror for resilvering, a most expensive job.

Wild weather warnings this spring should be reminders to: Unplug television sets when an electric storm's due; TV repairmen say lightning causes more minor damage to sets than most owners realize . . . until the set needs repairs. And, check which tree branches over the roof should be pruned. Strong winds can whip branches heavy with wet leaves and loosen shingles.

GETTING A LEG UP: This fossil fragment from a dinosaur leg is almost as large as Liz Moses, a visitor to the Dinosaur National Monument at Vernal, Utah. Photo was shot during taping of 3-2-1 Contact, a new TV science series for children on the Public Broadcasting Network in the U.S.

Bruno may be getting by but scraps are costly, too

By DR. FRANK MILLER

wonderful world of animals

Dear Dr. Miller: I've noticed you recommend expensive dog food a lot. Our dog, Bruno, is big and we can't afford to feed him that stuff. He gets table scraps. And he's making it very nicely, thank you. After all, how do you think all the dogs got by in this country before there was such a thing as dog food? — W.D.

Dear W.D.: In the good old days, a lot of dogs got by — and a lot didn't. Pooches suffering from pellagra and rickets and other nutritional diseases were all too common. As far as economy is concerned today, well, it's hard to achieve no matter what you're feeding. Odds are, though, if you're feeding a large dog on table scraps in adequate (quality aside) amounts, you're probably buying extra food for that purpose. A balanced human diet fed to a dog is more expensive, not cheaper, than a good dog food, and table scraps, on average, don't provide a balanced doggie dinner.

Dear Dr. Miller: You'd probably call my cat a foul-mouthed feline, but that wouldn't be fair because it isn't her mouth that smells bad, it's her breath. Actually, her teeth are clean and her gums are healthy looking. Her tongue's nice and pink and all that. But her breath is, indeed, bad. She's becoming socially handicapped. She won't gargle or even suck on breath deodorizers, so what options does she have left? She's getting desperate. Me, too. — E.M.

Dear E.M.: Your feline's fetid breath could be due to anything from a nasal infection to bad tonsils to a tumor. Since conjecture can't solve her problem (or yours), her best chance to regain social acceptance, and possibly head off a serious disease at the same time, would be tied to a visit to her doctor.

Dear Dr. Miller: About a snake who wouldn't eat. I had that problem, too. That's why I wondered how long my snake might have been able to go without eating if I hadn't been able to get him to. — S.S.

Dear S.S.: A nine-foot (not pettable) boa constrictor fasted for more than 500 days and lost 50 per cent of its body weight in the process. Most pet snakes would lose life and limb (if they had any) from caloric exhaustion long before that.

Dear Dr. Miller: Could Moses, my cat, have the same flu bug I do? — M.M.

Dear M.M.: Possibly, but not probably. Most feline flu viruses are not the same as those that affect humans. (Some are similar but seldom identical.)

Dear Dr. Miller: A friend has bet me that humming birds can't walk, just because he hasn't seen one do it. Neither have I, but that doesn't mean they can't walk, right? — J.G.

Dear J.G.: Right. The real reason they can't walk (or even hop) is because they have weak feet without ankle joints.

Several methods for planting dahlia tubers

jack beastall

There are several ways of handling dahlia tubers at planting time.

Probably the majority of home gardeners plant the entire clumps as lifted the previous fall. This method gives large plants and many flowers, but the flowers may not be as good as on smaller plants.

A few gardeners prefer to remove the tubers that are attached to the old stem and discard the rest of the clump. These cut-off tubers are planted in groups of three to five to give the effect of a large plant, but as each tuber makes its own roots the flowers are usually much larger in size.

The third method is to remove the tuber as above and set them in a deep box in a mixture of compost and soil up to the growth buds and leave them in a cool place to make roots and a little strong foliage before the time arrives to set the plants outdoors.

Those gardeners wishing to remove and plant separate tubers will notice the ones attached to the old stem have growth buds visible on the neck of the tuber close to the stem.

So as not to damage these buds the old stem is split with a sharp knife leaving the piece of stem attached to the neck of the tuber.

Provided the buds have not been activated into growth, the tubers can be planted now if the soil is workable. It will be several weeks before the foliage will show above ground, and frosts on clear nights may then be over.

As dahlias make a mass of growth and many flowers the soil should be prepared deeply and mixed with plenty of compost or old cow or horse manure.

Planting is the same for clumps or individual tubers. Holes are made about 15 to 20 cemtimeters deep to suit the size of the clump or tuber.

The stake to which the plant will be tied when about 30 to 40 cm high is driven at the north side of the hole, or at the back so as not to be too obvious later.

With individual tubers, the neck with the growth bud is placed at the base of the stake, and the soil mixture filled in to within roughly 5 cm of soil level. This allows soil to be added around the foliage until frost is over, if necessary.

If the soil is still too wet to work, the separated tubers can be spaced in a deep box in the compost-soil mixture to make roots and some top growth.

The box should be kept in a cool, but well lighted place, the temperature being around 5 to 7°C, and free from frost.

These rooted tubers will go outside when the soil is workable, in the same deep holes, but covered only with about 5 cm of soil. A board is placed over the planting holes at night to prevent frost damage.

Separate tubers need about one square metre of space, or three tubers 20 cm apart in a triangle.

Tubers in storage which have been too warm and already made some foliage growth, are treated the same as for rooting indoors, but a temperature of 2 to 5°C is preferred so that growth is strong and short.

Dahlias are usually planted in rows, but a root or two of special color or form of dahlia is an attractive addition to a border of shrubs or in the centre of a bed of annuals.

While the tuberous roots will need lifting each fall and storing, then replanting and staking each spring, the flowers are wonderful fillers at the end of summer into fall.

As the shrubs will be the permanent part of the design, the color of the dahlias chosen must either blend or contrast well with the foliage or flowers of the permanent residents.

If you have no dahlias on hand and have to buy a couple of tubers, there is the advantage of only a small layout of cash, little regret if your first choice is not perfect, and a good chance the plants will be suited to another part of the garden.

If this spring's choice should be unsuccessful, it would be wise to visit some of the late summer dahlia shows and locate the exact color you need.

Dahlias can differ in foliage shape and color as well as in the ultimate size of the flowers. The correct blend with your shrubs or annuals can result in a feature fall attraction.

For garden display such as this suggested idea, the tip of the growing plants can be pinched-off after three pairs of leaves have developed.

This will encourage a bushy plant with many side branches. Of these you may later remove one or two of the weaker tips if too many seem to be coming.

Tie one or two of the main branches to the stake when about 60 cm tall, using a soft, nylon twine knotted around the stake then looped over the branch.

About the time tying is needed an application of 6-8-6 or 5-10-5 fertilizer will help stiffen the mass of growth. Use one tablespoon to each plant, first thoroughly wetting the soil, spreading the fertilizer, then giving the crystals gentle dampening with the hose. Water again the following day, giving sufficient to carry the nutrients right down to the roots.

Dahlias need, in common with most of our garden plants, a thorough watering at the roots (not over the foliage) once every 10 days after growth begins, preferably in the morning while the plants and the soil are cool.

The plants need a mainly sunny place, although some of the mauve and pink varieties are exquisite in morning sun and keep their color better in dappled afternoon shade.

Disbudding for larger and near perfect blooms is necessary when dahlias are grown for exhibition, but the purpose of these plants is to have quality and quantity of color in a late summer and early fall shrub garden, therefore, disbudding can be forgotten.

UBC's 'dog-in-manger' stance upsets Petch

University of Victoria president Dr. Howard Petch is upset about the influence the University of B.C. has over creation of new professional programs in universities.

Petch told the UVic Senate a new program in health records administration proposed by the university at the request of the Universities Council of B.C. has been placed in limbo because of opposition from UBC, the largest university in the province.

Petch said the program had been rejected by UBC medical school and UVic was then asked to develop a curriculum.

Petch said it took about a year to prepare the proposal.

But before UCBC approves any new programs it normally checks with other universities in the province and in this case UBC objected.

"They (UBC) have a dog-in-the-manger attitude," Petch said. "They object to everything we do."

UCBC has yet to make a decision which university if any will get the program.

In other matters, the senate referred to the university's planning committee a request by science professors to split the huge faculty of arts and sciences.

Dr. Michael Pearce of the physics department said the faculty is so large there is a lack of common interest.

The faculty comprises 22 departments, 70 per cent of the university's teaching staff and 59 per cent of the enrolment.

A similar suggestion to split the faculty was turned down at a faculty meeting two weeks ago by 70 per cent of those attending.

But a poll of science professors taken later revealed there was a two-to-one split in favor of science becoming a separate faculty.

Buckley elected

John Buckley has been elected president of the 800 (Pacific Wing) Royal Canadian Air Force Association.

Others elected: Harry Rounds, first vice-president; Bud Hall, second vice-president; Doug Bourne, secretary; Bob Logan, treasurer; Bill McLaren, membership; Cliff Wood, bar; Archie Andrews, entertainment; Keith Sherritt, ways and means; Gordon Levy, finance; Gordon Dafoe, house; Hal Loeppky, sports.

The wing is the second largest in Canada with more than 400 members.

Block Bros. buys subdivision land

Development of the huge Kingsview Properties subdivision near Duncan will go ahead this year following a sale of the land to Block Bros.

The 505-acre parcel on Maple Bay Road has already been zoned for a maximum of 1,200 lots.

Only 60 lots had been prepared for sale by 1977 when Kingsview went into receivership.

Block Bros. has purchased the land from a court-appointed receiver-manager for $1,950,000.

The real estate firm said it will sell all 1,200 lots over 15 years. In the early going the lots will be sold at the rate of 60 or 70 a year to avoid flooding the market.

The 60 lots already serviced will go on the market by June.

The Kingsview development was the centre of controversy in the mid 1970s because some ratepayers wanted lots in that area to be no smaller than half an acre.

The lots will be 7,200 square feet.

Mayor Graham Bruce of North Cowichan said Block Bros. is within its right to sell lots that small because the land-use contract has already been signed allowing 1,200 lots on the site.

Block Bros. said it will pay off liens against the former owners amounting to several hundred thousand dollars to Chew Excavating of Victoria and Duncan Kondra Engineering of Duncan.

$20,179 for parks

The Capital Regional District has received a cheque for $20,179.65 from the provincial lands, parks and housing ministry to assist in the development of the 13 parks in the regional district.

A previous grant of $33,707.24 was made, making a total provincial contribution of $53,886.89 for park acquisition and development in the past year.

NEW PRINCIPAL of the Open Learning Institute of B.C. is Ron Jeffels, currently principal of Okanagan College. The institute offers nearly 50 courses and has 2,500 students.

Energy symposium set May 9

University of Victoria president Dr. Howard Petch will be moderator of a one-day energy symposium May 9 at The Empress.

Speakers will include B.C. Hydro chairman Robert Bonner, B.C. Cellulose president Ray Williston, Energy Minister Robert McClelland, and former provincial cabinet minister Sam Bawlf.

The symposium, sponsored by the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce, will study energy options for B.C. for the 1980s.

Chamber president Cedric Steele and Dr. Derrick Sewell of UVic will discuss energy conservation.

The chamber will prepare a printed report on the highlights of the discussion papers.

Moorings in the mud

By ANTHONY JENKINS

OFFSHORE*, by Penelope Fitzgerald. Collins. $14.95.

FAMILIAR STRANGERS*, by Bryan Forbes. Musson. $14.95.

ABIGAIL*, by Malcolm MacDonald. Random House. $14.95.

The marvellous thing about Offshore, Penelope Fitzgerald's second novel and the winner of Britain's Booker prize this year, is its gently lethal wit. The narrative is so deftly paced, so economical in achieving its effects, that the book may at first seem a slight mood-piece about river life in London during the sixties. At a second reading, one begins to appreciate the author's stunning control.

The novel's main characters are all losers: at home, as the title suggests, neither on land nor on water. Firzgerald draws them with a comic sympathy, stripping their inadequacies to the bone while allowing them the pathos of their well-meaning bewilderment:

"The barge dwellers . . . would have liked to be more respectable than they were . . . But a certain failure, distressing to themselves, to be like other people, caused them to sink back, with so much else that drifted or was washed up, into the mud moorings of the great tideway."

In closest focus is Nenna, a muddle-headed yet attractive woman whose marriage has somehow gone adrift. She would like her husband back, but he won't live on a barely watertight barge and she can't find the energy to make him do so. Meanwhile, their two daughters run wild along the mud-flats rather than face the embarrassment of the daily prayers-for-father's-return which the nuns at school determinedly offer up.

The hopes and defeats of the other barge owners weave through Nenna's crumpled life to the rhythms of the river itself, while the Battersea foreshore and its backstreets are etched unobtrusively in all their trendy tawdriness.

All these elements are held together by the narrative's unyielding detachment, even when we move, on occasion, into the minds of Nenna or her children, and the river world turns into a swirling dreamscape. Ironically, her daughters seem to have a firmer grip on reality than does Nenna herself; yet they still remain vulnerable and childlike.

Each aspect of this brief novel fits unerringly into its place while somehow creating the illusion of an uncontrived life of its own.

The narrative voice also distinguishes Familiar Strangers, the latest novel from Bryan Forbes, the British actor and film director. The story quite neatly intertwines fact with fiction in an ingenious version of the "fourth man" theory behind the Kim Philby spy saga.

Forbes' narrator is a middle-aged writer of spy novels who has spent his life in the shadow of his more eminent author-cousin, Theo Gittings. When Theo dies in pathetically lonely circumstances, his cousin feels obliged to sort through his personal effects and so uncovers the secret of his connection with Philby and friends.

That choice of narrator makes for a dry, literate tone, and enables Forbes to picture the ironies of Theo's past without going into the details of what Theo actually did for the spy ring, since the writer knows only so much as he can glean from his cousin's private papers and from his knowledge of those bits of the past they both shared.

The factual background of the novel, Cambridge undergraduate life in the early thirties and the characterization of Philby, Burgess and Maclean, is handled with conviction. But to fit all those details in, Theo is made to stay up at Cambridge for an unconscionably long time while his humbler relative coincidentally tags along on the sidelines as a projectionist in a local flea-pit.

Yet if the time-scheme of the novel's first half occasionally strains at one's belief, the book itself provides a solid Graham Greenish portrait of self-defeating spydom. Though I might add, in passing, that the mysteries of Theo's past proved somewhat more mysterious due to the fact that my copy of the book lacked four pages in the last ten!

This fictional "fourth man" comes to stand as a paradigm for the other factual three. Though his own carefully manicured novels have offered no hint of the real character beneath their mandarin style, Theo ends, like the rest of his Cambridge set, superfluous, haunted and derelict, protected yet betrayed by his Old-School upbringing.

Far less satisfying is Malcolm MacDonald's Abigail, the fourth in his sequence of novels about a family of Victorian industrialists. Here the historical background threatens the credibility of the main characters.

Abigail is (as the dust-jacket so romantically puts it) "beautiful and talented, passionate and headstrong." She also has a life-story which brings her into contact with practically every problem that concerned all classes of women in mid-19th century England. She begins as an innocent Victorian Miss, initiated into the secrets of sex by her drunken maid. She ends in secure middle-age as author, painter, pamphleteer, free woman and philosopher, and she fills each of these roles supremely.

Yet if Abby herself seems smug, preachy, and well-nigh unbelievable, the novel as a whole does give a detailed picture of the complex hypocrisies that Victorian women had to deal with. Sadly, the authenticity and intricacy of this theme strives uncomfortably against the novel's romantic characterization and plot.

'Hay-making in the Buckinghamshire Chilterns', from THE COUNTRYSIDE OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, by Wynford Vaughan-Thomas. Collins. $18.95.

Retold native myths 'amaze and delight'

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

THE TROUBLE WITH PRINCESSES*, by Christie Harris. McClelland and Stewart. $9.95.

Though born in the U.S., Christie Harris has lived in British Columbia since 1908 — first at Cranbrook and then at Prince Rupert, where she first came into contact with the natives and their stories. More than a dozen books by Christie Harris have retold those stories for modern readers. The Trouble With Princesses, Harris' latest book, continues the high quality we've come to expect in her work.

It seems that princesses of the northwest coast, like their European sisters, were always getting into trouble of some kind; and so each of these seven tales begins, "The trouble with princesses was that . . .", like Maada, "they were spirited girls who had no intention of just staying there, doing nothing, when the situation was intolerable," or, like Elk Maiden, "their parents could find no one they thought worthy of their precious daughter."

Elk Maiden's parents send her to an aunt who commands a village of young men. The young men, though, are different than the young men you or I know: they are really the Myth People.

"They looked and acted like human beings except when they put on their other forms and seemed to be ravens or sea gulls or wolves or mountain goats."

Elk Maiden's witch-like aunt arranges a race for these young men to see who should marry the princess. But, jealous of the girl, she uses her magical powers to confuse the young men and spirit the girl into hiding. The old woman's place in the village seems secure.

But Lynx, sharp-eyed Lynx, discovers where the girl is hidden.

"Closing his eyes to invoke the mighty Spirit . . . he gathered moisture in his mouth. Then he carefully aimed a drop of spittle at Elk Maiden's soft skin . . .

"Four times he invoked the Spirit. Four times he aimed a drop of spittle at Elk Maiden's soft skin. Four times he slipped away as silently as he had come . . ."

When Elk Maiden becomes pregnant she and Lynx are banished from the village. Death by starvation seems certain. But gluttonous Raven initiates a chain of events that see Elk Maiden and Lynx triumphant, the witch defeated.

And so with the other stories in this volume: the princesses are always in trouble with fearful demons and ghosts, but somehow — inevitably? — emerge unscathed from their adventures.

The details of their struggles will amaze and delight any reader still inhabited by a child.

Douglas Tait's finely-executed drawings are a perfect complement to Harris' text, and add an eerie dimension all their own.

HARRIS . . . for child in all of us

An integrity shines through

By LISA MITCHELL

DONAHUE: My Own Story*, by Phil Donahue & Co. Musson. $14.95

The audience really "makes" the show. That's what they — the recent spate of cover stories in national magazines, Phil Donahue's most effusive fans and Donahue himself — all say. They are speaking about live participation in the No. 1 syndicated television show in the U.S. and Phil Donahue's book somehow works in the same way. Like a woman sitting in the studio who may have waited two years for her ticket, the reader-as-audience can be nudged into bringing much of his or her own life to what Donahue provokes.

With sections on the "Donahue" show itself, including a chapter in which key company members write their own mini-biographies (company members with whom, incidentally, Donahue is sharing the profits of this book), we get more than the details of Donahue's life, career and — to paraphrase Holden Caulfield — all that David Copperfield kind of stuff. Though it's all here: his childhood in Cleveland after World War II, the growing up within the kind of Irish Catholicism that had him agonizing over "bad thoughts" — "what you got in 1953 when you saw a girl on a bus wearing a tight sweater."

He gives us excerpts from an A-plus theology paper he wrote at Notre Dame (where he served Mass three or four times a week) and speaks of how he believes all-male schooling "retards maturation . . . It also caused a lot of early marriages . . . entered into for the wrong breathless reasons." After marrying at 23, he and his wife, Margie, had five children within six years. The eventual breakup of that marriage is told with the candor and insight of a man who would become a compassionate supporter of women's liberation. Then came the excruciating process as a "retread" — a "divorced guy" — who was starting to "date" after 17 years ("It was like being back in college again with gray hair"); his fortunate meeting and subsequent friendship with Marlo Thomas; and his consciousness-raising that came with gaining custody of his four sons: "I thought about all the women in America who were raising children alone, without benefit of live-in help and . . . without my income and I realized one more feature of the double standard. Women in my circumstances are expected to raise children and money, without applause. When men do it, they are showered with attention and admiration . . ."

We follow his career from radio announcer and TV journalist to the "Donahue" show in Chicago. ("My fantasy was to work in a city with two airports.")

Above all, this is a book of feelings, opening with the mixed ones Phil Donahue has today about being a "celebrity." He had discovered early on the seductive power of — and the responsibility of — broadcasting; saw the moral contradictions that come with the territory of a profession in the media. In one of the most potent chapters, "Phases," he describes the changes that led to his activism and heightened his questioning of authority — all authority — so that, by the late 1960s, amidst conflicts over racism, sexism and the Vietnamese War, Phil Donahue could no longer relate to "a paternalistic church."

Of his relationship to the church that so dominates this story, we read at book's end: "Never again would I go to confession for 'absolution' . . . nor allow a group of old men (sitting on hard wooden benches in Rome or Trent) to presume to tell me what is a mortal or venial sin and what is the prescribed punishment for each." Yet, he adds, "a little piece of (his faith) would always be there." Wherever his ongoing wrestling, confronting, searching, prodding leads, I'm sure we'll be kept posted. The integrity we sense about Phil Donahue on his show is here on the page.

DONAHUE . . . rejects church

We hear the poets but do not always understand

By DOUG BEARDSLEY

CORDILLERA*, by Norbert Ruebsaat. Pulp Press. $3.50.

SALTSPRING*, by John Marshall. Oolichan Books. $5.95.

A BOOK OF THE HOURS*, by David Helwig. Oberon Press. $4.95.

Cordillera is a first book of poems by the West German-born, Vancouver-based Norbert Ruebsaat.

The title poem takes its name from the mountain range that forms the backbone of the American continents that stretch from the Yukon to the Cape. As Jon Furberg points out in his moving and committed introduction, this range "holds together a living body which is our material source."

The poem itself may not be "political," but it rarely moves beyond a tenuous description of landscape. The language of the poem is not nearly as felt or inspired as Furberg's fine introduction. What Furberg says the poem does and what the poem actually does are, I'm afraid, two different things, and there is something rather precious about Ruebsaat's treatment of such powerful, raw material.

The language employed in "Riddles," the second section, also fails to generate much enthusiasm for itself, and it is only in the final third of the book that we get a sense of what Ruebsaat can really do. The influence of Wallace Stevens may be noted in poems such as "Cairn," while "Karleaner Draws A Map Of The World" is a found poem that is inventive in its form. The delightful "Words For Making A Harpoon" and the exciting prose poem "The Swimmer," all show Ruebsaat at his poetic best.

If Cordillera had consisted of more of the kind of short, human lyrics that dominate this final section, and had been less concerned with larger social and political issues, Ruebsaat would have succeeded in what Jon Furberg claims he set out to do, giving us a poetry of "origins, realities, first things."

Oolichan Books continues to offer beautifully designed volumes of some of the most interesting poetry being written on the West Coast.

John Marshall's Saltspring, his second book for this Lantzville, Vancouver Island publisher, is perhaps the most attractive of a catalogue of Oolichan writers that includes Robert Kroetsch, John Newlove, Kevin Roberts, and Ken Cathers.

Marshall's world is incredibly spare, his poems springing from the sensing mind rather than speaking from the heart. Here is a typical example entitled "The Predator:"

the limit

the eyes stop

only the ear moves

listens —

silent/sands

in this (other

made) silence

no one

nothing

Like some haiku, and most Chinese painting, poems as delicate as these must resonate in the reader's mind; there must be a sympathetic vibration sent up off the page by the sparse language the poet has chosen to suggest the poem. The reverberation of word against word, or word with word, results in a suggestion, a heightening, a generation of context, an emotional tension produced by the unusually broken, nervous line-breaks that create an anxious ambience in the best poems. How else are we to grasp the nuances, the essence of the experience? It's as if we are permitted to overhear, but are not always expected to understand.

Poems such as Marshall's demand much of the reader, demand that the reader bring a great deal of his or her own emotional experience to bear on the precious language of the poems. Whether or not John Marshall's evocation of Salt Spring Island is successful depends, to a large extent, on you.

David Helwig is a short-story writer, novelist, scriptwriter for the CBC, and a poet little known on the West Coast.

The best poems in Helwig's A Book Of The Hours come in the short sequences that dominate the collection. Whether he is Thomas Bulfinch, writing of his protege Matthew Edwards, or sharing the pain of a left lover, Helwig transforms myth and history into a warm and likable, low-keyed human vision.

Helwig's imaginative updations of "Hansel and Gretel" and his brilliant "Rapunzel" who, "old and still barren," begins "to imagine cities inside me — governed by men with knives — who murdered all my unborn children," are excellent.

The poet gives us his finest writing on "A Trip West," particularly in this delightful poem entitled "The Fish Speak":

You think your only wish is to bring us up into the sun where we will gasp and flap, but truly your lust is envy of our gilled and green world.

You have given back to creation your cold simplicities, and in the thin air of speculation
you flap and drown.

You are slow and fat and air-blown.
We have the submarine perfections, our appetites burnished and pure.

You envy and would come among us, but cowards, always on the wrong side of the mirror, you sit blind and thick and ingeniously baffled.

Liberal backbenchers want to shed muted role

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — The long-awaited rebirth of the Liberal Party is already underway. But it has come in an unexpected way, from an surprising quarter. And it isn't pretty.

Defiant, divisive murmurs are welling up in the Quebec wing of the party — that group of loyal MPs who once served as Pierre Trudeau's silent backdrop. The most outspoken have already let it be known that their docile days are over.

For 16 years, French Canada reliably provided the Liberals with 50 or 60 members who could be counted on to say what the party bosses told them to say, vote as their leaders told them to vote and sit stony-faced in the House of Commons the rest of the time. It helped if they were good at selling party memberships and snaring federal funds for their ridings. You never saw them on the 11 o'clock news.

Then along came Joe Clark.

When he and his Conservatives unseated Pierre Trudeau last May, they also reduced the once-powerful Liberal cabinet to a group of ordinary MPs. For nine brief months, the old hierarchy creaked under the strains of its new opposition role. But several backbenchers shone.

"Being in the opposition was an ego trip," said Pierre Deniger, one of the brightest young Quebec MPs. None of them are willing to see it change.

Deniger, 33, is a transportation lawyer, an expensive dresser, an eloquent speaker in either official language and an unofficial leader among the French-speaking backbenchers who call themselves "the new wave."

If Deniger gives the movement its aura of quiet inspiration, his colleague Dennis Dawson is the voice of passion. Dawson is a bearded backroom type, who dresses in sweaters, speaks in a rapid excited volley and looks more like university activist than a 31-year-old father of one.

He has watched the political awakening of his colleagues over the last nine months with fascinated exaltation. "Guys started saying no to their regional ministers (Jean Chretien, Marc Lalonde and Andre Ouellet). They started saying no to the party hierarchy. They learned to live with independence and there's no turning back."

But it is not altogether clear how the new activists will go forward either.

When the Liberals swept back into power in February, it looked as if the Quebec zealots would find themselves, once again, in the old role of frustrated backbenchers, stripped of any satisfying outlet for their ideas and energy.

And so it would have been in the pre-Clark days.

Under the old rules, the 74-member Quebec caucus — even though it represented half the Liberal seats in the country — would have quietly minded its own affairs letting the 14 Quebec cabinet ministers speak on national questions. The ordinary Quebec MP would have been lucky if he spoke once every couple of weeks in Parliament.

There is nothing so demoralizing as being a government backbencher — as any federal politician will sadly acknowledge.

At the moment, nothing concrete has changed. The old rules are still there. But the will to)accept them is not.

"The guys have decided they shouldn't have to go back to that traditional role," Dawson said. "I've been watching them very carefully for the past two or three weeks. It's almost like observing an exercise in group dynamics. Something is evolving and it's very powerful. If those guys aren't offered a voice in this Parliament, they'll fight for it."

That's not all they want. They're looking for power to influence important policy decisions within their own party — both on matters affecting Quebec and on major national questions. They want more flexibility in Parliamentary committees; they're tired of defending the latest government line while suppressing their own feelings. They want a mandate to travel in western Canada as ambassadors for both the party and as Quebec federalists.

"The days when you could ram anything you liked through the Quebec caucus are gone," Deniger said. "It's tough to muzzle MPs who have tasted freedom."

Last week's meeting of the Quebec caucus provided dramatic evidence of this to the party brass. Although the 70-odd MPs emerged from their five-hour session smiling and affirming their confidence in Marc Lalonde as the voice of Quebec Liberalism, there had been some "bare knuckle stuff" to quote Deniger, behind closed doors.

— One angry MP warned that if the government gave a multi-billion-dollar subsidy to Chrysler to re-fit its Windsor plant, it was likely to provoke nothing short of a mutiny among many Quebec Liberals. How could they go back to their ridings and argue for one Canada if the federal government was going to give massive hand-outs to the American multinationals which had enriched the Ontario economy for years while Quebec had languished, next door?

— Another complained that no one had bothered to explain to Quebec MPs how Finance Minister Allan MacEachen's floating interest rate policy worked. How were they supposed to defend a painful policy they didn't even understand?

— A dozen MPs advised Lalonde there would be an enraged outcry from Quebec if the federal government chose to buy its new fighter planes from Toronto-based MacDonnell Douglas rather than General Dynamics in Montreal."If the government makes the wrong decision, the economic consequences for Quebec would be unbelievable. It could be game over for the referendum," Dawson said.

— A few even went so far as to hint that Chretien, Lalonde and Trudeau, with their elegant Ottawa homes and their powerful friends, were perceived by many Quebecers as being out-of-touch.

There were shouting matches. There were hurt feelings. But the air was cleared as it never had been before in the Quebec Liberal caucus.

"We accomplished a great deal. It was exciting, possibly our best caucus ever," Deniger said, enjoying the recollection.

He would like to look forward to more of the same, but he has a more pressing — indeed overpowering — concern. He wants to keep his province in Confederation.

Quebec's referendum on sovereignty-association hangs like an ominous cloud over the long-term plans of Deniger, Dawson and every federalist in the province.

Perspectives

By Rev. John A. DAVIDSON

Easter, like Christmas, has become an important merchandising festival. The Easter Bunny isn't as valuable a sales-symbol as Santa Claus, but you can't say he isn't trying. And for many of us Easter is merely the occasion for a very

But we who are concerned for the religious significance of Easter should not let our indignation get out of hand: after all, even in the Church, the community of the risen Christ, Easter has become a rather ambiguous occasion. We have tended at times to crowd the risen Christ out of Easter, and we are inclined to put the Easter message into a seasonal isolation.

James S. Stewart, one of the great preachers of our time, in a lecture to a group of Scottish theological students, asked this question: "Can it be right when our people come up to God's house on Easter morning that we should treat them to reflections on the reawakening of the earth in springtime, or to a rehash of the arguments for immortality?"

He added, "It is a desolating corruption of the Resurrection Gospel to regard it merely as one more argument for individual survival." No doubt there is some spiritual value in the contemplation of spring flowers. And Christians certainly ought to think about life eternal. But these concerns do not constitute the Easter Gospel.

Then, we tend to treat the Easter message as an utterly seasonal one, forgetting that it is central in the Christian religion. R. W. Dale, a renowned English churchman of a century ago, had his congregation sing an Easter hymn almost every Sunday morning.

A visitor to his church made this report: "When I first attended the service there, I was surprised to hear on a November morning the hymn Christ the Lord is Risen Today, Allelulia! I mentioned it to Dr. Dale afterwards and he said: 'I want my people to get hold of the glorious fact that Christ is alive and to rejoice over it.'" An Easter hymn nearly every Sunday might not be advisable for our congregations, but a service with an Easter emphasis in, say October, might be very much for the good of the faith of today's Christians.

It is one thing to have your heart stirred by the Easter message and the glorious music of Easter; it is quite another thing to carry the reality of Easter with you through the year. To isolate the Easter message is to sentimentalize it. We must not try to tether Jesus Christ among the lilies.

Some years ago the English writer, J. B. Priestley, was asked to write a short article on his religious beliefs. He said that at the moment he was "perhaps better able to deny than to affirm." He added, wistfully, "I regret this because now is the time for gigantic affirmations. The world is in need of them." We are a generation better able to deny than to affirm. We nourish our souls on negatives. Yet we are aware of our need for affirmations, gigantic affirmations that will give us assurance and hope and something around which to organize our lives.

The Easter message is the gigantic affirmation on which the Christian religion is built. Whatever else Christianity is, it is faith founded in awareness of the risen Jesus Christ, faith established in the Resurrection. We give that affirmation special emphasis at Easter but we Christians must live by it throughout the year.

Sunrise communal services set for Easter

The 38th community Easter sunrise service will be at 7:30 a.m. Sunday in Centennial Square.

The Easter message will be by Rev. Charles McKnight, a man with a timely message, who speaks forcefully with high purpose and dedication.

As always, the band of the Salvation Army's Citadel Corps will play.

Everyone is invited, especially visitors and Sunday school classes, youth groups, and young people's societies.

GARDEN CITY United Church plans a sunrise service at 5:40 a.m. Easter Day at Fable Cottage Estate. Breakfast will be served at the church, 4050 Carey, after the service. Rev. Ronald Johnstone asks attendants to arrive before 5:30 a.m. Lawn chairs may be brought if desired.

THE FIRST Orthodox Easter celebration in Victoria using the Western rite will be held Sunday at 10:30 a.m. at 1020 Blanshard.

CHURCH CHRONICLES

Rev. Thomas McDowell of Seattle, of the Western rite vicariate of the Antiochian Orthodox Church of North America, will officiate.

The celebration in honor of the Risen Lord is open to all. Information, phone 474-2462 evenings or weekends.

ANGLICAN RENEWAL Centre's Healing of the Whole Person program with seminarists Dennis and Rita Bennett will be at the centre, 310 Henry, from Thursday through Sunday at St. John's Church, Quadra and Mason, nightly at 7:30 p.m. There will be ministers' meetings at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. Friday, April 11, and women's meetings at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. Friday and 10 a.m. Saturday.

FIRST CHURCH of the Nazarene will present Music Machine, a children's musical for the family at 7 p.m., next Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the church, 4277 Quadra.

Through songs and drama, with excellent lighting and scenery, character traits such as love, peace and joy come alive. All are welcome.

CHALK ARTIST and evangelist Harry O. Engstrom, will be in Victoria at Gosworth Road Community Church, 2845 Gosworth, April 6 to 13 excepting Saturday.

Engstrom, of Eugene, Ore., and wife Dotty, hope the 10 a.m. Sunday meetings will make it possible for many children to attend. Daily meetings will be at 6 p.m., with Bible study at 7:15 p.m.

Engstrom does gospel magic, puppet shows and plays the saw, as well as drawing.

JEWS AROUND the world will gather in homes around the Seder table Monday for the first night of the most ancient of Jewish holidays, Passover—or Pesach, as it is called in Hebrew. The festival commemorates the deliverance of Israel from 400 years of slavery in Egypt and recalls their mass exodus about 3,500 years ago.

Its purpose is to symbolize important features and lessons of the Exodus and the redemption from Egypt.

On Sunday at 7:30 p.m. at Congregation Emanuel School, 610 Fort, Rabbi Harvey Markowitz will conduct a free Passover Seder workshop to help those planning a family Seder make it more enjoyable and interesting for those attending.

Information, call 382-0615, except Saturdays.

ELK LAKE BAPTIST church, 5363 Pat Bay Highway, will show Climb a Tall Mountain at 7:30 p.m. Easter Sunday. The Spirit of Joy Singers from Emmanuel Baptist church will sing. Everybody welcome.

VANCOUVER ISLAND Christian Village begins its spring semester of studies Tuesday.

On Tuesday mornings and Wednesday evenings the subject will be Kingdom Living—showing how to live on gospel principles and how to turn one's life into victorious Christian living. Instructor is Esther Bennett.

On Tuesday evenings there will be mini-courses, combined with an hour of vocal music for everyone with Esther Bennett and Sharon Pryor.

For information on registration, fees and other details, 598-7372.

DENNIS VINCENT is on the academic honors list for the fall semester at Evangel College, Springfield, Missouri.

Vincent, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Vincent, 1044 Willaston, and a junior at Evangel, is majoring in music education with an emphasis on piano.

SURPASSING its objective for the second consecutive year, the United Church mission and service fund raised $18,875,000 last year, according to The United Church Observer.

The fund exceeded its goal by more than $70,000, according to a story in the Observer. The figure represents an increase of 7.5 per cent over 1978.

Contributions from the United Church Women across the country totalled over $2.5 million, an increase of six per cent.

CLC's Rose quits over QFL stance

TORONTO (CP) — The general vice-president of the Canadian Labor Congress has resigned after saying the congress is unable to cope with a "paternal dictatorship" imposed by the Quebec Federation of Labor.

Ken Rose, also Canadian vice-president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, said his resignation was prompted by the haven given by the Quebec federation to that province's electrical unions, which bolted from the international union.

Rose said in his letter of resignation to congress president Dennis McDermott that "if we must live under a paternal dictatorship, as envisaged by Brother Laberge (Quebec federation president Louis Laberge), our choice is, and must be, to resist with every force at our command, and if we are destroyed in the struggle in that province we will at least leave with honor."

He said he realized that the congress' executive council could not act effectively against the Quebec federation for violating the constitution because of the structure of the congress.

The Canadian Union of Public Employees, Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the fisherman's union in British Columbia also can make it difficult for the congress's executive to deal with the Quebec federation at conventions because of the number of delegates they can muster, he said.

McDermott wasn't available for comment.

In an interview with The Globe and Mail, Rose said the electrical union, which has more than 70,000 members in Canada, is not withdrawing from the congress.

He said the union does not want to pull out "but we are being pushed into a corner," and much will depend on what happens at the congress convention in Winnipeg in May.

Rose said the congress is in an impossible position. If it tried to impose a trusteeship over the Quebec federation at the convention, other unions such as CUPE would object because it has its own position to protect in Quebec.

Coates urges energy grid

HALIFAX (CP) — The president of the national Progressive Conservative Party and Newfoundland's Energy Minister both say Canada needs a national energy grid.

Party president Robert Coates said Friday a national grid could be the key to Canada's energy self-sufficiency and it would provide our industrial base with a secure supply of electricity.

"Canadians realize we have an abundance of all forms of potential energy — in hydro, oil and gas, coal, nuclear and tidal — but we continue to be without a delivery system to effectively move that energy from the resource centre to the area of demand," Coates said.

In an interview from his Amherst, N.S., home he said the impact of a national grid "could have the impact for energy self sufficiency in the 1980s that the building of the trancontinental railway had in forging Canada to nationhood more than a century ago."

Newfoundland Energy Minister Leo Barry said the development of a national grid could better develop its untapped power.

"Right now we are in a take-it-or-leave-it situation," he said in an interview from St. John's. "We are forced to sell our surplus power to Quebec rather than transmit it elsewhere in the Maritimes or keep it here for our own use."

A national grid would give each province the freedom to transmit surplus electricty to distant markets, he said.

Paint link to child disease?

TORONTO (CP) — Four of eight children treated for Reye's syndrome by a Hamilton physician had slept in freshly-painted rooms, and Dr. Morrison Hurley says there may be a link between paint chemicals and the disease.

The syndrome usually develops after a child has been sick with a B-strain influenza or chicken pox. Scientists have been searching without success since 1963, when Reye's was first identified, for the agent that turns flu or chicken pox into the potentially fatal condition.

Four of the 14 children who have developed the condition in Ontario this year have died.

But Hurley cautioned that his observation would be difficult to test scientifically. "How are you going to find every child who has slept in a freshly-painted room?"

Hurley has written to the Canadian Medical Association Journal about his observations and consulted with other Reye's syndrome researchers. He said his findings make him "a little superstitious" about freshly-painted rooms.

"It's probably reasonable in the midst of the flu season that if you've got a choice and don't have to paint to hold off for a week or two," he said.

Only one child in 60,000 to 100,000 with influenza-B develops Reye's. Symptoms include vomiting, fever, and behavior changes. The victim develops swelling of the liver and brain.

Rooney cleared of graft charges

DAVID ROONEY
. . . not guilty

OTTAWA (CP) — Liberal MP David Rooney walked out of county court a free man Thursday after a complex two-week trial on four charges of corruptly taking money or services from former employees.

The 42-year-old Newfoundlander had shown no visible emotion throughout the trial and remained impassive when the jury foreman read the not guilty decision reached by her fellow jurors after 11 hours of deliberation.

But defence lawyer Don Bayne beamed, raised clenched fists in the air and uttered a quiet: "Yea."

The MP for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception then told reporters that, despite his cool courtroom appearance, he was as concerned for his fate as any human being and the support "of my wife, my constituents, the truth . . . and the brilliant defence by Don Bayne," were the keys to his successful trial.

The Crown had alleged Rooney asked Rod Moores — now a Liberal member of Newfoundland's House of Assembly — his wife Joan and Tom Singleton for money in return for giving them jobs as aides either in his parliamentary office or in his constituency office.

It was further alleged by the Crown he had misused parliamentary allowances in hiring first cousin Fred Garland to paint the home of his wife's mother.

Testimony heard in court became an often-confusing tangle of allegations concerning political intrigue and extortion when Bayne suggested Singleton and Moores tried to blackmail Rooney with a news release alleging criminal misconduct.

"I feel no desire to get back at them," Rooney said of Moores and Singleton.

In fact their evidence "helped illuminate the truth" of the charges, he said.

Their testimony conflicted on several points and Moores was admonished by Judge Ken Fogarty on more than one occasion to be consistent and less evasive.

But Rooney had hard words for the RCMP who were called into investigate him on the basis of information contained in a front page story in a Toronto newspaper.

The November, 1978, story was based on information contained in the news release prepared by Singleton.

"I'm convinced the RCMP conducted a surprisingly inadequate investigation," he said. "I don't mean to imply there was something they could have found had they gone back a little further.

"There seemed to be an obsession (on their part) to get a politician."

He said that although the RCMP was offered access to all his files, officers seized them "three months after I could have shredded them all" and later broke into his St. John's apartment.

They probed back to his days as a Memorial University student and even searched his mother-in-law's Bible, Rooney said.

Boy's wrong turn kills pedestrian

TORONTO (CP) — A pedestrian died Friday after being struck by a car driven by an 11-year-old boy.

Police said the the boy was driving under his father's direction down a city street. He tried to turn a corner but failed and the car came to a stop straddling the sidewalk, where Carmindo Cavares, 34, of Toronto, was walking.

Police said the boy gunned the motor to try to complete the turn as Cavares came behind the car, but it was in reverse gear and struck Cavares.

He was knocked onto the trunk, carried across the street and up a driveway and smashed against a parked car — so hard that the parked car was rammed into a garage door. He died in hospital a few hours later.

Canadair crash laid to 'gadget'

MONTREAL (CP) — A Canadair executive said Friday that the crash of a Challenger executive jet will not stall the company's sales and development plan for the plane.

"What happened had nothing to do with the airplane," said Matt Zaleski, a Canadair manager at the company's California test strip.

"The gadget that failed is a gadget used only for testing. It's a safety device that failed to disengage. We know we'll continue until we're certified."

One of four Challenger prototypes built since the Canadair program began in 1976 crashed early Thursday near its test strip on the Mojave Desert in California.

The three-man crew bailed out but the pilot, Derek Ronassen, 52, of Alberta, a major with the Canadian armed forces, was killed. The co-pilot is in hospital with a broken ankle and the flight engineer had a slightly sprained neck and shoulder.

Charles Pratt of Transport Canada said the plane was conducting engine stalling tests when the engine stopped in mid-air. The stall caused an emergency chute at the rear to open, leading to loss of control.

Pratt said his department saw no reason to halt production of the plane. Transport Canada and the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration are investigating the crash.

Zaleski said the Challenger is "a month or two away" from certification, with only functional and reliability tests to be completed.

He described these as simple tests "requiring the plane to fly around the country to prove its durability." He said it's very unlikely there will be any delays in production because of the accident.

Customs cracking mail too

OTTAWA (CP) — Customs officials have been opening overseas mail on their own authority for several years, former Progressive Conservative house leader Walter Baker said Friday.

And the practice stirred considerable controversy at the cabinet level and was under review when the Conservative government was defeated at the polls in February.

Baker said he first learned that customs officials were free to open first-class letters suspected of containing contraband when a preliminary draft of the proposed Customs Act was presented last fall.

The Post Office and Revenue Canada disagreed over the definition of mail — the opening of which is restricted by law.

"The Post Office historically has not clearly defined what mail is," Baker said. "I don't know when a letter becomes a package."

The difference becomes crucial when smugglers of contraband began using sophisticated methods of concealing their wares in a letters confined space, he said.

The Customs Act, proposed by the Conservatives but not tabled in the Commons, would have clearly defined the authority, he said.

In an Ottawa dispatch Friday, the Globe and Mail newspaper said confidential documents show customs officials made 4,134 seizures of goods arriving by mail from overseas between 1976 and June, 1979. "Roughly half of these seizures involved letters and 1,878 pieces contained drugs with a street value of $5.5 million."

The story says a memo by Peter Connell, deputy minister of the customs branch of Revenue Canada, to Walter Baker, then Conservative revenue minister, last October, noted that the question might be raised as to how the department could have statistics on drugs or other goods found in letter mail when the law restricts the opening of letters.

"The letters were opened on the basis of the department's interpretation of 'letter' which the post office disagreed with, but which in the absence of a postmaster-general definition the department, supported by legal opinion, felt inclined to apply," the memo is quoted as saying.

Robert Kaplan, the new Liberal solicitor-general, told The Globe and Mail in an interview earlier this week that he believes the RCMP should have the power to open mail for drug as well as national security investigations, but added he plans to await the recommendations of the McDonald commission on RCMP wrongdoing before acting on this.

Spraggett acquitted on indecency raps

WINNIPEG (CP) — Former CBC television personality Allen Spraggett of Richmond Hill, Ont., was acquitted in provincial court Thursday of two charges of gross indecency.

The decision came more than five months after Spraggett's trial on the charges involving juvenile males.

Judge Ian Dubienski said he acquitted Spraggett because of doubts about evidence from two 15-year-old boys, who testified against the former host of the weekly television program Beyond Reason.

Outside the court, Spraggett described the ordeal he and his family experienced after the charges were laid last year. He was one of several men charged with sex offences following an intensive police investigation.

"I hope no other innocent person has to go through the agony that my wife and five kids have endured," Spraggett told reporters.

Spraggett had pleaded innocent to the charges.

Dubienski said the two boys gave conflicting evidence and the Crown offered no corroboration for details given by either witness.

Some component systems sound the way this guy looks

You can spend a lot of money on clothes that look pretty awful together. You can also spend a lot of money on stereo components that sound pretty awful together.
Usually that happens when someone spends too much money on one part of a system and not enough on another.
And because component systems are like chains, they can only sound as good as their weakest link. So an $800.00 system with $100.00 speakers will sound like $100.00.

That's why at Sound Hounds we sell only matched component systems. Balanced systems where each component makes sense with all the others. That way—no matter how much you spend—you always get the most system for your money.
But the real secret to this system is the quality of the components you choose. Which is why at Sound Hounds we sell only the very finest audio components in every price range.

And before any product goes on the shelf, we let our service laboratory try to blow it up. They try every dirty trick in the book to make a product do something it isn't supposed to. Then they put it through a tough series of lab tests. Then they let it run for days straight under terrible conditions.

And if it's still running after that, we might decide to sell it. But only if it's a good value compared to what else there is on the market.
It's because we do things like this that we can offer matched component systems that really are better buys.

For an example, take our $829 system. It matches the NAD 3070 receiver with two Advent/2 speakers and the NAD 5020 automatic return turntable.
All of the components are reliable and good sounding. Each component fits in with the others. The Advent receiver has just the right power for the Advent/2. There are no strong links. There are no weak links.

The result is a system that puts out natural, balanced, musical sound.

We think this is the best value component system you'll find anywhere.
Thanks for reading.

records

By ISAAC WILLIAMS

The term "innovative" is seldom applied to Canadian records. To discover an innovative Canadian pop album is a rare occurrance — one that needs to be shared. The album in question is the debut by Toronto band The Numbers called Add Up.

Their name (from The Who's original name The High Numbers) and their mid-sixties pop sound seems to place the band firmly in the Mod Revival camp. Side one of the record certainly fits the Mod formula of short, fast love songs that sound good on the radio.

One song, Sideways Elevator, has already been playlisted on a number of radio stations. Most of side one is good contemporary pop but side two is where the term innovative springs to mind.

JAGGER
. . . Scarborough next?

Pause now and reflect that the mid-sixties sound was followed by West Coast Psychedelic music. The growth of the revival movement makes it logical to assume that some one will eventually update the acid era music. Well, The Numbers can proudly claim to be the first to try. Side two opens around 1966 with a Byrds sounding song Leave It To Me. Then the high light of the album, Mr. Dempster, and we are in the golden era of the San Francisco acid-rock. The songs altering tempo and concluding guitar run is enough to send one scurrying for old Quicksilver Messenger Service and Jefferson Airplane albums. The third song continues the time warp with a Grateful Dead style ballad while the next song covers the period when the Psychedelic rockers first discovered country music. Images of early Buffalo Springfield and Poco come to mind. Finally the last song brings us up to 1977 and sounds like Chris Spedding doing a mod revival number which brings us back to side one and another play.

If you want a record that will stand a lot of repeated playings then get The Numbers Add Up in your collection. The fact that they are Canadian will allow you to be a little smug.

The Numbers owe a small debt to another Toronto band The Diodes for opening up the Toronto club scene for New Wave music. Hopefully success of the Numbers LP will cause a few people to investigate The Diodes second album Released. The album is more primitive and not as successful as The Number's debut but both groups share an affection for early Psychedelic music.

The best songs on Released, Photographs from Mars, Madhouse and Weekend, are in a late sixties style with phased vocals and eery organ. This seems to be the best direction for The Diodes to follow. Their attempts at pop fall on the average side, good ideas but poor song writing. Tired of Waking up Tired is a great title but the song is just three minutes of the title repeated over and over, very tiring. Their more straight forward rock songs are hampered by some over-wordy vocals and rather plodding drums.

The album is successful in comparison to their really boring first album and the Diodes deserve at least a five out of ten for this effort. Hopefully with some developments in the right direction their next album could be truly great.

If the Psychedelic revival is here then its centre is in Toronto. The centre of the music world may very shortly be shifting to southern Ontario, record companies will sign up all the local bands, older bands will record in Toronto for credibility, Mick Jagger will buy a house in Scarborough. Remember, the next time you go to Toronto, wear a flower in your hair.

Gorman persona all action

By
Audrey Johnson

When you first meet Lynne Gorman you are immediately — not gradually as with many people — struck by her personality. It is like stepping out the door of a room full of still air and subdued light into a sunny, breezy day with everything moving and shining.

The immutable, on-flowing forces of nature in its most creative mood seem incarnate in this tall, blonde, dark-eyed woman who is one of the most active people in Canadian theatre.

A West-coaster by birth and education, Lynne is back on the coast now after nearly two decades of developing her career from a Toronto base.

She is in Victoria to appear as the fading actress, Jessica Logan, in the Bastion Theatre production of David French's Jitters. The comedy opened Friday at McPherson Playhouse for a two-week run.

Lynne is one of those women who is by nature, liberated, and does not have to make an issue of it. She honed her acting talents early in her career in six seasons with the Canadian Repertory Company in Ottawa, playing with brilliant people like Chris Plummer, William Hutt, Bill Shatner, Eric House and Amelia Hall.

She has ranged across the country playing leading roles in major regional theatres as well as many of the smaller ones — performing leading roles in such works as Tiny Alice by Albee, Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, The Lion in Winter and Long Day's Journey Into Night.

Theatre work has also involved her as an adjudicator, an instructor in workshops for professional and community theatre and as a fundraiser with a group seeking a permanent theatre for Ottawa.

Radio, television and film have also claimed her talents; her most recent TV appearances being in episodes of The Beachcombers, The Great Detective and Sidestreet.

As a performer, she prefers the stage and radio media to film.

"There's too much waiting around in filming," she says; "Ugh! I'm too impatient when I'm acting — I want to get on with it."

She puts her hands to her head in a gesture of frustration. "All that stalling for light changes ... the retakes. I do it but I don't enjoy it."

Nevertheless film interests her in other capacities.

She is enthusiastic, for instance, about being casting director for feature films and national commercial films and running her own casting director business in Vancouer.

In particular she glows as she discusses casting The Strange One, a multimillion dollar feature film to be made by Crawley Films of Ottawa.

Based on the Fred Bodsworth novel about the mating of a Canada goose and a barnacle goose, The Strange One is a touching parallel human love story.

Some of the movie will be filmed on location in the Hebrides. Lynne says she will probably be going overseas to work with a London casting director in order to find the people for the Scottish portion of the film.

Directing provides yet another outlet for this multi-talented person. She was one of Canada's first female artistic directors, serving for two full seasons in that capacity with the St.Catherine's Press Theatre.

Lynne has been back in her native city for about a year and finds its theatre activity greatly increased.

Lately some people have been saying that Vancouver is "stealing the show"; that the epicentre of Canadian theatre is shifting to the west coast, she says.

But in comparing the two cities Lynne feels that Toronto enjoys a much freer flow and exchange of theatre talent.

"In Vancouver there is some insularity. Most of the theatre people I see there tend to cluster in confined groups," she comments."

Her eyes flash and her hands move in emphatic parabolas as she talks about the need for integrity on the part of theatre people.

"There are occasions — not unfortunately infrequent — when a director will cast someone because he or she likes the actor and has worked with him before, meanwhile shoving into the subconcious the knowledge that there are other actors available who are better suited to the role.

"That's an example of the artistic integrity of the director being questionable.

"No director should ever permit himself to make what he basically knows to be a wrong or an inferior choice — not even for friendship, or for any other reason!"

This is Lynne's first experience with Bastion and she finds a fine spirit exists in the Victoria-based theatre company.

"There is a joy of theatre to be found that is not present everywhere," she says. It comes, I feel, from the fact that Ed Stephenson cares so much about theatre. He is certainly up there as one of the dedicated ones."

As for French's play — the second of his plays to be nominated for the Floyd S. Chalmers Award for the best new Canadian play of the Toronto season — Lynne says "it's a good play, very commercial, very witty and amusing. A complete switch for French, it's fun to do and has been great fun for all its audiences."

Lynne's single reservation — it's purely personal — is to do with the fact that while all the spaced out and bitchy backstage incidents the play containshave certainly happened, the playwright has telescoped them into one company, one time-frame.

"We're not given any glimpse of the love and comradeship," she says; " the special kind of communication that is always there basically in site of frazzled nerves."

But then with a shrug and a toss of the hand, she agrees:

"That's a case of poetic licence, I suppose."

people

If you're big in show biz, you suffer the critics — but only Donna Summer suffers one in Moscow. In an article titled "First Lady of the Night," Yakov Borovoy says her past is shady and her disco music "pornographic" — that, "sentimental songs of past decades have been replaced with vulgar sexual shouts." Furthermore, says he, "Businessmen are the only people who really enjoy this ... and Donna Summer is just a puppet in their hands." Borovoy — contacted at his home — was amazed anyone would think he'd been unduly harsh. He admits he hasn't met Donna, but says, "I thought it was a very favorable article. After all, I mentioned what a talented singer she is."

Playwright Arthur Miller, and television star Greg Evigan were just two rich and famous New Yorkers who took to their bicycles on the first day of New York's transit strike. But actor Sam Levene went to the theatre as usual — in a limousine.

It may not be as bad as Midnight Express, but possession of 0.17 ounces of marijuana has landed Jake Duncan a three month term in a South African jail. Duncan is tour manager for the pop group the Rollers.

Burton Cummings . . . a noisy lad

The CBC has cancelled its prime-time program Ombudsman, which battled red tape on behalf of private citizens for seven seasons. CBC said it is expanding its news to an hour-long program at 10 p.m. Ombudsman's staff of more than 20 face bureaucratic snarls themselves now as they wait to see whether they still have jobs.

Juno Awards host Burton Cummings took male vocalist of the year, but he won't win any popularity contests at CBC-Radio. Senior producer Margaret Daly of the program Morningside was more than a little miffed when Burton showed up late for a live broadcast, and she says it's a violation of a $5,000 agreement. Cummings sang three or four songs on Morningside, she said, and was "obstreperous." That means noisy.

London city officials have approved a plan to erect a life-sized statue of Charlie Chaplin, ignoring a group of Londoners who opposed it because they claim he was a communist. But the long-simmering controversy is not over yet. Now it goes before the city's highway and works committee, which is scheduled to rule on the proposal in May. But chances are good the Little Tramp, born and bred in London and knighted by the Queen in 1975, will get a permanent home.

It includes unique book-objects and printed edition work. Curated by Doreen Lindsay and Sarah McCutcheon, it has been organized under auspices of the Powerhouse Gallery in Montreal.

Funded by Canada Council, National Museums of Canada and the Samuel and Saidye Bronfman Family Foundation, it will remain on display through April 26. Hours are Tuesday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturdays, 12 to 5 p.m.

A near-record of entries, numbering over 2,000 is once more poised for the start of the Greater Victoria Music Festival, which commences April 17.

Included are 30 adult choirs — well up over last year. There will be representation from up-island communities such as Brentwood, Port Alberni and of course the Cowichan Chorale which has taken top honors in the past two years.

Always rousing interest are the colorful dances performed by ethnic groups and these too have burgeoned over last year.

Festival programs containing full details will be available shortly from music stores and at the Festival Office in Nelson's Music Store, 1315 Government.

Next week is a big one for theatre buffs. While David French's Jitters at the McPherson has the field to itself for the first half, on Thursday two shows open: The Belfry's most successful season starts its concluding run of Colette, the Colors of Love, which is a west coast premiere of a highly successful Toronto show; and on the same Thursday night, Victoria Theatre Guild opens a week's run of Once a Catholic.

Weekend reminder: Performance of Bastion's Jitters, only on Saturday this weekend. Sunday has the chamber music of the Deane-Skaggs-Solose Trio in the afternoon and Paul Revere and the Raiders in the evening, both at McPherson Playhouse.

Amity Singers will present the final concert of the season on Saturday, April 12 at Christ Church Cathedral.

The choir will perform a varied program for brass and chamber chorus under guest conductor Brian Law with works by Schutz, Purcell and Byrd.

Included in the program, which starts at 8 p.m., will be Weatherscapes by Canadian Dérek Holman, and Howard Cable's arrangement of French Canadian folk songs.

SECOND WEEK!

Local flavor shines through plot

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

The Changeling, a $7 million Canadian-made suspense yarn starring George C. Scott, is a well-executed thriller about things that go bump in the night. In this case, the thing doing the bumping is inside a creaking old mansion and Scott is determined to find out what it is.

There are enough creaks, groans and unexpected developments in this Canadian-made movie which garnered a number of Genie Awards (Canada's version of the U.S. Oscar given for the first time this year) to keep audiences on the edges of their seats. And director Peter Medak's (The Ruling Class, A Day in the Death of Joe Egg) plot is tight and fast-moving.

The biggest flaw in this movie, which provided tiny parts for Canadian talent like Barry Morse and John Colicos, is that none of the main characters are sympathetic enough to care about.

Scott is a famous composer named John Russell who lost wife (played by British actress Jean Marsh) and daughter in a tragic upstate New York traffic accident. But his gruff and guarded portrayal has only an occasional flash of warmth, which is more than we get from his real-life wife Trish Van Devere. Van Devere is cold and refined as a classy lady from the heritage protection agency who helps solve the mystery of the haunted house.

Another problem is the haunted house; a rambling, delipidated, structure no one in their right mind would want to inhabit, least of all a wealthy composer who invites his music students home for recitals. The interiors of the house were actually an elaborate three-storey set constructed at Panorama Studios in West Vancouver.

Russell has instant rapport with the ghost and, enlisting the support of a psychic, he soon starts to unravel the mystery. His detective work leads him to a confrontation with crusty old U.S. senator named Joseph Carmichael, played with frail power by 78 year-old matinee idol-turned character actor Melvyn Douglas (nominated for an Oscar as best supporting actor this year for a similar role as an aging industrialist in Being There) and an interesting climax.

While the detective work takes place the audience has fun picking out recognizable spots like Vancouver's Gastown, where many of the scenes were shot and Hatley Park mansion at Royal Roads Military College, used as Carmichael's palatial estate.

Buffalo show offers a depth for lingerers

the galleries

By AUDREY JOHNSON

An exhibition that is of exceptional interest and importance, and at the same time a considerable challenge to visitors, is currently at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria.

The show, entitled American Painting 1955 to 1976, consists of 25 large-scale paintings from the collection of the Albright-Knox Gallery of Buffalo, N.Y. The collection comes to us via its organizer, the Norman Mackenzie Art Gallery of the University of Regina.

The inclination of the non-artist visitor might be to give it the once-over-lightly treatment before moving on to the more familiar style and subject matter of the W.P. Weston paintings in the adjoining Sylvia and Colin Graham Gallery.

But anyone with more than a purely superficial interest will be rewarded by pausing to ponder, armed with the well-illustrated informative catalogue that accompanies the show, plus a gallery leaflet that in simple terms, clarifies the main movements represented.

Having spent the better part of an hour thus equipped I can vouch for a growing appreciation and awareness for what had, at first, seemed obscure and therefore unapproachable.

Once you have begun to look with some insight at these works, specific interest will grow; some paintings will draw you back, start trains of thought and emotion; others will probably still fail to turn you on, but no matter. The same thing could be said of any show.

The influence of the great American painter, Jackson Pollock, is prevalent if not obvious, his effect on the individual style of many of the artists indicated in catalogue notes. Explorations of a broad range of non-figurative philosophies and techniques — the push-pull theory of Hans Hofmann for instance, in which retreating and forward-thrusting areas of color are juxtaposed, as well as bare canvas against thick impasto and hard edges against broken contours.

Year of Meteors by Robert Indiana represents a phase in which he explored the use of the circle and a hard-edge technique. The painting borrows from Walt Whitman's poem of the same title and from the stencilled letters on passing ships, trucks and packing cases seen from his studio's dock-view windows.

If I were asked to choose two that spoke most clearly to me, the choice would undoubtedly be Robert Motherwell's The August Sea and Richard Diebenkorn's Woman in a Window.

Motherwell, an influential leader of the American avant garde, has created a color-saturated field of blue. He has used simple geometric lines to divide the rectangle into interesting shapes and a controlled flourish of dark blue pigment as a focal point.

The whole conveys the image of a boat, sails furled, bobbing in a wind-whipped ripple. Even a scrap of paint-bare canvas at the top contributes the suggestion of a fluttering pennant.

Woman in a Window is fascinating for its strong compositional elements and Diebenkorn's ability to invoke a mood of solitude and despair with the abstract painter's sparcity of detail. Color and light values are intense and atmosphere-inducing.

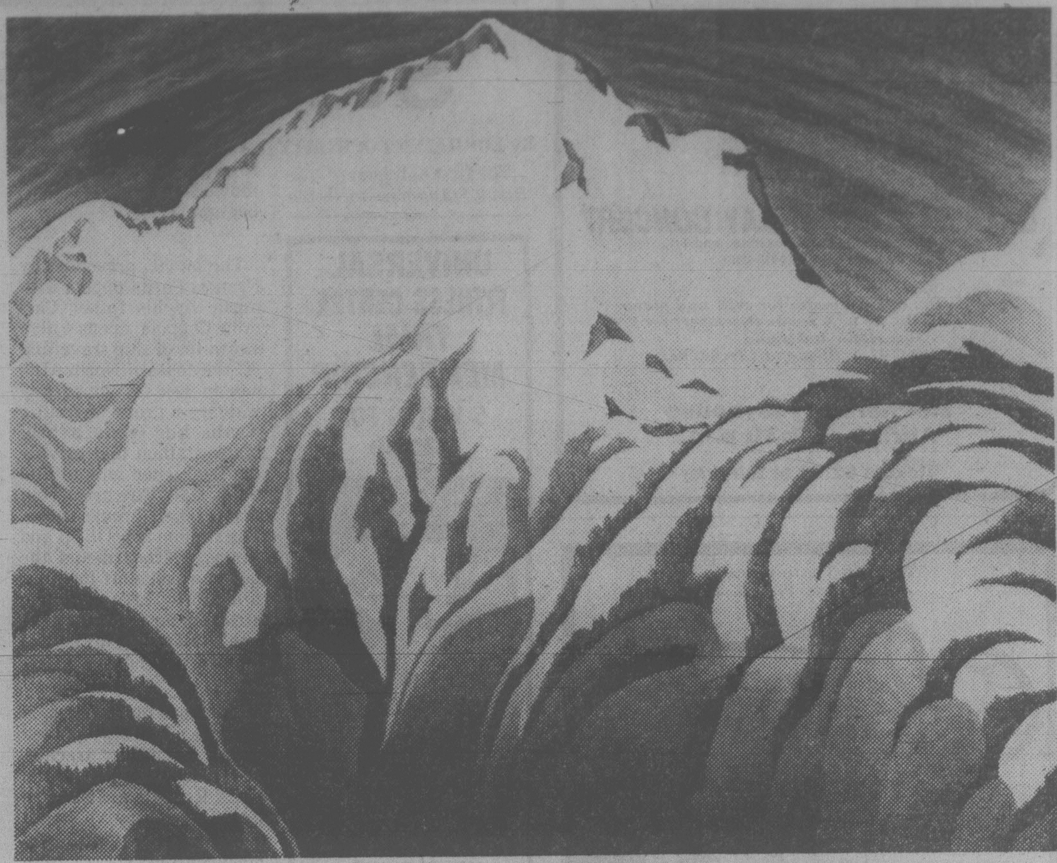
Close to these two for personal pleasure would be Helen Frankthaler's soak-stain work, where the thinned paint is poured onto unprimed canvas, producing bold-subtle shapes, pigment overlays and fluid yet defined relationships; and Larry Rivers' The Final Veteran, a painting based on photographs from Life magazine concerned with the death of the last Civil War soldier.

It is one of several inspired by the same source, carried out in broad sweeping brush strokes; the important elements — the flag, a cross, the heads of the soldier and the funeral guard barely indicated but making a complete and telling statement.

According to gallery personnel, children visiting the various rooms, with their innate sense of design, are reacting most positively to this show.

William Percy Weston's paintings of British Columbia scenes span nearly a half-century of his life in this province to which he came from England in 1909.

"He, more than any other artist," says the catalogue note written by the gallery's acting director, Ian Thom, "captured the awesome, lonely nature, the spirit of British Columbia."



W.P. Weston's style as seen in the 1948 oil painting of Mount Roderick

Disco splits Mann, Atlantic

By LEONARD FEATHER
Los Angeles Times

It looked as though 1980 would be a watershed year for Herbie Mann. This month he will celebrate his 50th birthday; his last Atlantic album was his 50th, and it was just 20 years ago that he signed his first contract with that company.

By way of showing their gratitude for the long row of hits he created for them, from Comin' Home Baby and Memphis Underground in the '60s to Super Mann in the '70s, Atlantic rewarded him, as Mann puts it, "not with a gold watch, but with a pink slip."

Ahmet Ertegun, Atlantic's chairman of the board, tried to break it to him gently. "We can't pick up your option on the terms stated," he said, "and as a friend, I think you'd be better off looking elsewhere for a deal."

Mann, the first musician ever to achieve world acceptance as a jazz flutist, isn't worried; several major companies are already in the bidding for him. He is, however, contemplative about the meaning of the relationship and its sudden ending, in terms of what it says about the industry.

During the 20 years with Atlantic, Mann rode the crest of every musical wave: Latin, Afro-Cuban, bossa nova, Middle Eastern, Memphis funk, R and B, jazz-rock, reggae. Through all the pressures he tried to retain something of a jazz element.

"I was willing to compromise my original concept of playing, in order to reach a broader audience," Mann said, "and my fans went with me through all the different ethnic areas because there was still a blues or Latin or funky base. But the disco thing was the final blow.

"They told me my records were selling in the hundreds of thousands, but I needed to sell even more to justify the advance they were paying me; so they made these suggestions and I went along with them and did Super Mann. They spent a lot of time and effort on promoting it, but it wound up selling less than some of the others, such as a really good Brazilian album which they had neither felt nor understood."

Mann, for his part, neither liked nor felt the Super Mann brand of music and refused to play it at his personal appearances. As a result, there were two entities: the on-record disco Herbie Mann and the in-person Mann. "We had to put out disclaimers saying we weren't going to play our hit record. So we didn't have the advantage of a record company promoting our live performances, and vice versa."

It could be argued, of course, that if Mann was ashamed to play this music in person, he should have been equally reluctant to record it.

He granted the point, but qualified it: "At the time that didn't enter my mind. I was just trying to survive the contract."

Stallion's start fades fast

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

The first half hour of The Black Stallion is worth the $4 admission price — even though the rest of the movie does not live up to its beginning.

The movie, presented by Francis Ford Coppola with music by his father Carmine Coppola, opens with a storm-tossd ship travelling off the coast of North African in 1948. A young boy watches a group of frantic Arabs hog-tying a big, black stallion and driving the frightened animal into a tiny stall. Fire breaks out and all hell breaks loose. The stallion frees itself and jumps overboard and the boy is washed off the deck moments later. Panic stricken, he grabs the stallion's tail and is towed to a small desert island.

The next 20 minutes is sublime. The boy, played by an engaging, freckle-faced newcomer named Kelly Reno, is at first desperate to survive in an alien environment and spends all his energy finding food and shelter and watching the stallion from a distance. Gradually the two survivors begin to appreciate each other and the boy is able to coax the Arabian's friendship in a beautifully filmed sequence that has the pair of them coquetishly accepting each other at the water's edge as the African sun sets.

Not one word is spoken during this part of the film, but the budding friendship between boy and horse is so moving and the photography so breathtaking it seems natural and right. Watching the little fellow grasp a handful of black mane and go galloping off along the sand is like fulfilling a childhood fantasy.

But the boy and horse are eventually rescued and taken to America and the spell is broken. The magic disappears and the movie goes downhill. Back in his home town the boy returns to school, and the care of his bereaved mother (Teri Garr) who has lost her husband in the tragedy. Mickey Rooney surfaces as a broken down former jockey-trainer now living on memories. The boy and Rooney, who does a good job and is up for an academy award as best supporting actor, conspire to teach the stallion how to race.

Buddy's past is rich

Bernard "Buddy" Rich began his jazz career in 1938 at New York's Hickory House, where he appeared with Joe Marsala and later turned up in the bands of Bunny Berigan, Artie Shaw, Tommy Dorsey and Benny Carter.

But Rich has been in show business practicaly since his birth. Eighteen months after he was born June 30, 1917, he was on stage in his parents' vaudeville routine.

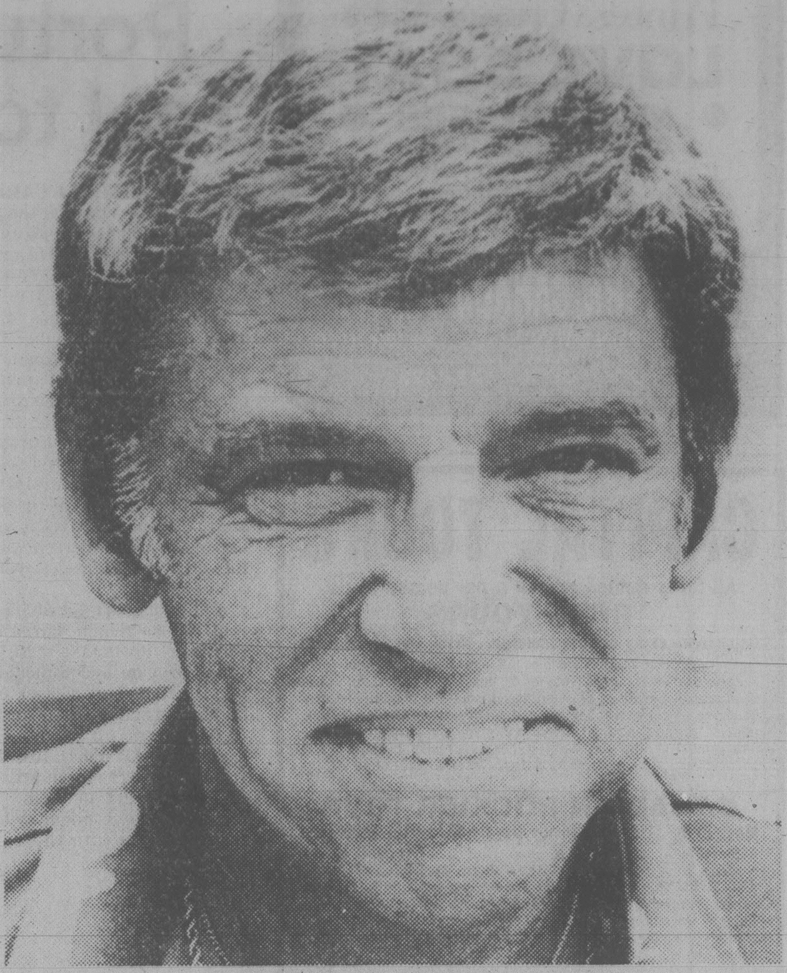
At four, he appeared in Raymond Hitchcock's Broadway show Pinwheel and two years later moved to Australia for two years where he was billed as "Traps, the Boy Wonder" in his first solo act.

At 11, he toured the U.S. with his own showband.

Frank Sinatra once had so much faith in Rich he backed his band — which started near the end of the so-called "Big Band Era."

Buddy leaned toward jazz — where he is today. His first connection was with Norman Granz and the touring Jazz at the Philharmonic troupe.

Rich was also a leader of the Bebop and Bop idioms.



BUDDY RICH and his Big Band hit Victoria at 8 p.m. Friday, April 18 for a single concert in the University Centre Auditorium. The event is the first of a series planned by radio station CFAX in conjunction with Prestige Entertainment Agencies. Rich has worked and recorded with Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Thelonius Monk and Errol Garner.

Portugal offering real tourist bargain

By MICHAEL CARLTON

LISBON — You hear the stories:

—A friend checks into a hotel in Paris. Price of the room — $140 a night.

—You go out for dinner in Copenhagen. With wine, it costs you $110.

—You pull into a gas station in Italy. The fill-'er-up tab is a mere $30.

—And London has zoomed past Tokyo as the world's most expensive city, according to a study by the respected Financial Times of London.

You get the drift. Europe just isn't a bargain for our battered dollar.

Despite the advertising blitz that paints the continent as the place to go this year, European travel is still incredibly expensive to the person who remembers the old five-dollars-gets-you-a-room-and-a-meal days.

But take heart, for at least one country is offering a genuine bargain to travellers this year. Portugal's state-operated pousadas provide accommodations — some quite lavish — at a price even the most budget-conscious can afford.

But there is a catch — the pousadas (say poo-ZAH-dahs) are located away from the metropolitan areas so you have to drive to get to them. That was the plan of the government, which wanted to lure tourists into the rural areas of the country.

You either have to take a bus (the buses are clean and inexpensive) or drive a car (definitely no bargain with the price of gasoline) to reach the inns. But once there, whether in the cork barrens of central Portugal, the mountains of the north, or by the seacoast, you will find inns which by architecture and design mirror the culture of the local region.

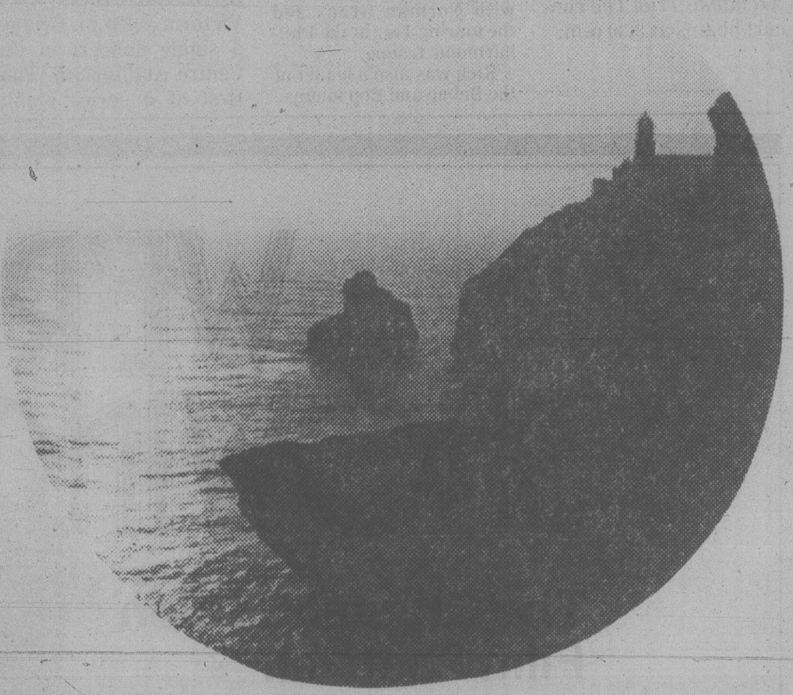
Examples from the pousada system:

Housed in a castle built by King Dinis in 1281, the Pousada da Rainha Santa Isabel, the showcase of the system, dominates the town of Estromoz. Opened in 1970, the castle pousada contains 23 rooms, all furnished with 17th and 18th century antiques. The walls of the hallways are lined with antiques and hung with original oils.

All this for $47 for two with breakfast.

The "Pousada dos Loios" in Evora was built in a 15th Century monastery and the Pousada do Infantes in Sagres overlooks the remains of Prince Henry the Navigator's fort. (See separate story)

One warning: the pousadas are small and very popular with both the Portuguese and visitors to the country, so reservations must be made very early. Stays are limited to five days during the busy season. Information is available at the Portugese National Tourist Office, 548 Fifth Avenue, New York 10036.



Cape St. Vincent — where explorers defied the horizon

Pousada at earth's edge

By MARC F. MILLON

SAGRES, Portugal - To the ancients, Cape St. Vincent represented the end of the world. Beyond lay boiling seas, fierce winds and monsters.

Today this rocky promontory in the farthest corner of Portugal remains austere and forbidding, a tortured land that rises from cliffs more than 500 feet high. Pointed rocks push through scrubby soil, while stunted fig trees clutch at bare, exposed roots.

There is a whitewashed lighthouse at the tip of the cape. Built to outlast centuries of relentless, raging squalls, it directs ships from the Atlantic around the corner of this world, toward the warmer calm of the Mediterranean.

Three miles east of the cape, where the time-eroded cliffs of the Algarve begin, lies the fishing village of Sagres. Visitors who wind their way here find an isolated and remote haven—a village that existed, and continues to exist, literally on the edge of time.

Down in the harbor, swarthy fishermen, idle by day, sit chatting as they repair their nets. Deep-sea fishing is advertised for the adventurous, and restaurants and beach grills serve the fruits of both land and sea. There is a beach, though the water is colder here than in those resorts farther down this famous coast. And there a few hotels and pensaos.

But the place to come, if you are in Sagres, is the Pousada do Infante, a government-run resting house built on a cliff overlooking the remains of Prince Henry the Navigator's fort. This small inn has only 15 rooms, each with a balcony surveying sheer cliffs and rugged sea. It has a superb restaurant, offering regional specialties and seafood of all types.

And yet, what is most striking about the Pousada do Infante is that though the building is modern, everything in it is a reminder of that prince who came to this same spot over 500 years ago to delve into the mysteries of the unknown.

The walls of the pousada are decorated with facsimiles of maps drawn by cartographers who were contemporaries of Prince Henry.

Chinese look to tourism to meet the trade gap

By TAKASHI OKA

PEKING - Like almost every other aspect of China's relations with the Western world and Japan during the past two years, tourism has moved from the age of wide-eyed euphoria to one of sober evaluation, of both problems and opportunities.

Many tourists complain that the exoticism of China no longer is enough to compensate for overcrowded and often barely adequate hotels, sudden changes of plan and uneven, dilatory service. Of course, such complaints are not the rule; many visitors still find that the Chinese cuisine is superb, that guides go out of their way to be helpful, that tipping is very much the exception, not the norm.

But as Lu Xuzhang, director of the General Administration of Travel and Tourism, pointed out in an interview with the official People's Daily last year, visitors to China in 1978 (the first big year for Chinese tourism after the restoration to normality after the fall of the so-called "gang of four") numbered as many as the cumulative total of visitors during the previous 20 years.

With such a sudden surge, keeping the country's limited accommodations and travel facilities up to international standards is a severe strain, particularly during the peak summer season. At the same time, construction of new hotels and facilities progresses slowly.

China's three-year period of readjustment, of which this is the second year, discourages large capital expenditures. The Western and Japanese companies that were returning from China with mouth-watering hotel construction and management agreements a year ago now are saying very little. The progress from letter of intent to firm contract is long and frequently disappointing.

With all this, tourism is bound to be a growth industry in China. Last year 960,000 tourists visited, according to a spokesman for the tourism administration. Of these, 800,000 were overseas Chinese and 163,000 foreigners. Tourism earned China $420 million in 1979, the spokesman said.

The Chinese are looking to tourism to help meet the growing trade gap as their industrialization and modernization program eats up foreign exchange. (Last year China imported nearly $2 billion more than it exported.)

New hotels therefore are going up, although at a pace slower than originally planned. A 25-story hotel in Shanghai, designed and financed entirely by the Chinese, has been under construction since late last year. I.M. Pei, the Chinese-born American architect, has designed a hotel for the Chinese in the western hills outside Peking. An Australian group has built inexpensive motels in six cities, bringing with them everything from doors and windows to curtains with koala-bear motifs.

Last year, a tourist spokesman said, China had around 30,000 beds available for foreign tourists. This year, with all the expansion and new construction going on, it is impossible to say what the actual status is.

An institute of tourism has been established in Shanghai that will hold two-year training courses in hotel management. New magazines dealing with tourism are being published. A national conference on tourism has been organized, the first one having been held in the seaside resort of Beidaihe last September. And there is growing concern for the environment as well.

High-rise hotels are discouraged in such scenic spots as Guilin (Kweilin). There is a new interest in using local materials and Chinese designs. At the moment, with hordes of tourists poised to pour in over the spring and summer, there is a mood of uneasy anticipation and some confusion.

But for all their complaints, tourists are an amazingly hardy lot. If the immediate outlook for tourism in China is uneven, long-term prospects look reasonably encouraging.

Japanese port remembers first American encounter

with
STAN DELAPLANE

Townsend Harris landed at the fishing port of Shimoda on August 19, 1856. He was the first American diplomat to Japan. And for an envoy, he was hardly diplomatic. Japanese customs of the hot bath -- "everybody in at once" -- shocked his Bostonian morals.

"The lubricity of these people passes belief," he wrote in his journal. "The moment business is over, the one and only subject on which they dare to converse comes up . . ."

He noted at sundown the garrison drums beat. "Informing the soldiers it was now time to go to the houses of pleasure."

Harris had no use for the strict vegetarian diet of Buddhist Japan.

He ordered a cow slaughtered and cut into prime ribs. A piece of barbarity that shook all Japan, much as if today the Russian ambassador to Washington started eating people.

To appease and calm this dreadful creature, the governors of Shimoda drafted Okichi, a 17-year-old fortune cookie of great beauty.

She was borne to his house in tears. But -- (so the story goes) -- she fell in love with him. Poor Butterfly.

Her sacrifice has been celebrated in poetry. In the geisha houses of Japan, there is a dance -- a kind of ballet -- telling the story of Okichi.

Hollywood did a story on it. Put John Wayne in the role of Townsend Harris, a most unlikely piece of type casting.

The temple where Harris set up consular headquarters is in a grove of trees, a mile from the centre of Shimoda. Japan put the steak-eater as far as possible from Imperial Tokyo.

Beside the temple is a stone monument:

"This monument erected in 1931 by butchers of Tokyo marks the spot where the cow was slaughtered for the first tims (cq) in Japan for humn (cq) consumption."

One of Japan's graceful geisha girls

Japan eats beef now. Sliced paper thin, cooked in broth, called 'shabu-shabu."

"Sound like waves washing on shore," said my maid at Rising Clouds Mansion. "Bubbling pot sound like waves. Shabu-shabu."

Beef cattle are treated like royalty. Kobe beef, it's called. The maid said: "Kobe farmer massage cow every night. Make meat tender. Also give cow bottle of beer. Make cow happy."

"Your driver speaks perfect English," said the car rental man in Atami.

Turned out he spoke two words: "Sank you."

It's a pretty drive along the edge of the Izu peninsula. In the blue water, women were diving for seaweed, rich with i[illegible]ne and a part of Japanese cooking flavor.

They wore diving goggles and white panties. That's all.

I said to the driver: "Do you know about Harris-san and Okichi?"

"Sank you," he said.

'What about lunch? Do we eat in Shimoda?"

"Sank you." I could see I might starve on this journey.

Wax figures of Harris-san with mutton chop whiskers and Okichi in kimono were in the temple. (The last photos I got show only Okichi. What happened to Harris-san?)

There's another version of the story I heard at the Tokyo Foreign Correspondents' Club.

"When Okichi arrived at the Harris house, he thought they'd sent her to do his laundry. When he found out the real reason -- after three days -- he fired her with a proper burst of Bostonian hell-and-damnation."

This story puts a damper on the annual Shimoda Festival. Shimoda sticks by the original romantic tale.

"After all," they say, "Harris-san was only human."

It's a sexy little town. At the Ryosenji Temple, there's a sex museum. A panel celebrates Okichi and her love. (Harris-san left her and went back to Boston, the bounder.)

There are glass cases filled with erotic implements. Showing the ingenuity of Japan, when the soldiers' evening drums beat, before the modern days of rubber and plastic and magazines with centerfolds.

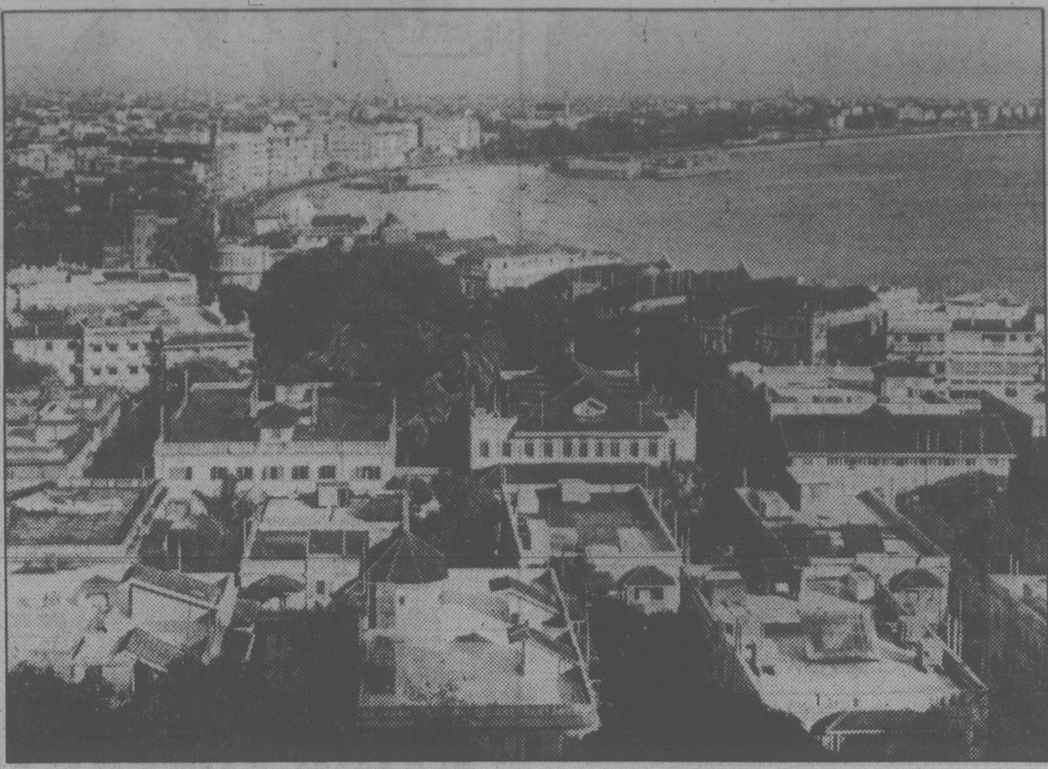
Bombay—crossroad of India



A panoramic view of Bombay from the Malabar hills

Visitors to Bombay will find its busy downtown, high-rise building and lovely suburbs similar to those of big cities in the west. But the resemblance ends there.

Bombay is a place where you'll find ancient horse-drawn victorias, performing monkeys, double-decker buses, isolated fishing villages that seem untouched by time, a major railway station built like a gothic cathedral — all teeming with a colourful, mind-boggling assortment of people.

The junction of many international air and sea routes, Bombay is an industrial complex connected by air, rail and road to all major Indian cities.

But this cosmopolitan city was once "Mumbai", an archipelago of seven islands on the Arabian Sea, inhabited by fishermen. In the early 16th century Portugal took possession of Mumbai and renamed it "Bom Bahia" — the beautiful Bay. It was given to King Charles II as part of a dowry when he married Catherine of Braganza, the Portuguese princess. After the English came, the islands were joined and the trading posts of the 16th century paved the way for Bombay to become the commercial capital it is today.

Bombay today, seems different from the rest of India. Its position as a commercial centre has drawn people from all over the country. The fusion of millions of people, speaking different languages, belonging to different faiths and following different customs has given Bombay a distinctive and delightful character all its own.

Bombay has some of the best hotels in India. The Taj Mahal, a luxury-class international hotel, is as fancy as the Ritz and in Bombay, as famous as the original Taj Mahal. There is an excellent selection of hotels, ranging from the elegance of the Taj to basic, but clean, shoestring-budget delights.

Of India's "big four" — Bombay, Delhi, Madras and Calcutta — Bombay is the most westernized city. English is widely spoken. Western music, books and clothes are extremely popular. Discotheques are a vital part of Bombay's social life, and movies from the west draw enormous crowds. However, custom and tradition still play a major role in the lives of most people. You might see a group of businessmen at lunch, dressed in suits and speaking perfect English, yet, each will go home to a lifestyle completely different from that of the others.

Hindus believe in cremation, and Muslims and Christians in burial. Members of the Zoroastrian faith hold fire and earth to be sacred, and believe that cremation or burial pollutes these elements. Therefore, they dispose of their dead in the "Towers of Silence". These tall, cylindrical towers and the surrounding park are enclosed by a high wall.

Special bearers leave the dead at the top of one of the open towers and the bodies are rapidly consumed by vultures. After a few days the skeletons are disposed of in the tower's well, conforming to another Zoroastrian tenet: rich and poor shall unite in death.

Since people of so many different religious persuasions live in Bombay, it follows that there are different places of worship for each one. You can visit the Mahalakshimi Temple, a Hindu edifice dedicated to the goddess of wealth, and then walk acorss the Haji Ali's Tomb, a Muslim shrine.

From the tomb you can see the Worli Buddhist Temple across the small bay. There are Roman Catholic, Protestant and Presbyterian churches, Jain and Zoroastrian temples and many more. Every religious faction is well represented in this city.

The Gateway of India on the waterfront is Bombay's most famous landmark. The archway was built to commemorate King George V's visit in 1911. The Gateway, following the pattern of cultural integration, is a fusion of Islamic and Hindu architectural styles. The Prince of Wales Museum, just a short walk away, has a fascinating collection of rare Mughall paintings, beautiful jade and crystal, and interesting natural history specimens. The adjoining Jehangir Art Gallery holds exhibitions of paintings by contemporary Indian artists. The Victoria and Albert Museum in Byculla is the oldest one in Bombay, containing exhibits that relate mainly to Bombay and Western India.

A ferry will take you from the Gateway to the cave temples on Elephanta Island. These Hindu temples, believed to date back to the 7th century, have been carved out of sheer rock. The temples are dedicated to Lord Shiva, and the sculptures inside represen his many manifestations.

In one powerful carving he is depicted as the Hindu trinity: Brahma the Creator, Vishnu the Preserver and Shiva the Destroyer. The Kanheri Caves, numbering over 100, are about 30 miles away. They are believed to have been built by Buddhist monks in the earliest days of rock-cut architecture, between the second and nineth centuries.

Bombay has several sandy, crescent-shaped beaches. The two-mile-long Juhu Beach, just 12 miles from downtown Bombay, is a lovely spot to spend a few days. There are many good hotels in the area. The less crowded Versova Beach, close to Juhu, stands next to a typical Indian fishing village barely touched by the rapid pace of the 20th centuries.

Bombay turns out more movies per year than does the United States. You'll find the movie star mania very much in evidence in Bombay. Huge billboards all over the city advertise the latest films. A major traffic jam could be the result of devoted fans trying to catch a glimpse of an actor or actress in a car at the traffic lights.

By and large, films are made to appeal to the masses. Hapless heroines suffer as life leads them through several complicated twists of luck and fate, brightened by dance and music, which end with the heroes triumph and the villians languishing in jail.

Shopping in Bombay is an unforgettable experience. Stores stock goods from all over the country and the variety is immense. You'll find beautiful ready-made clothes in the smart boutiques. If you prefer the personal touch, India is a country in which you can afford to buy several yards of printed silk, fine muslin or handloomed cotton, and have a tailor convert it into just about anything you fancy.

The best part is that you can do it all without going bankrupt! Shopping in government emporia, large stores and boutiques is enjoyable, but you miss the essence of Bombay if you don't visit Jhaveri Bazaar, the traditional silver market, or Chor Bazaar, the "Thieves Market", where you can put your bargaining abilities to the supreme test.

The sights and sounds of Bombay life are fascinating. Whether you're a seasoned traveller or a first-timer, you'll find Bombay an experience in variety, colour and constant surprises.

The gentle allure of Aswan

By THOMAS LIPPMAN

Striking sand dunes line the Nile banks at Aswan

Life in Cairo provides many reasons for wanting to get away from it all, but Egypt offers remarkably few places to do that.

Despite the excellent climate and hundreds of miles of coastline, there is hardly any place in the country suitable for a holiday of more than three days.

The beaches of Alexandria are dirty and crowded; years of war, poverty and neglect have left most of the others undeveloped, isolated or off-limits because of military restrictions.

Resorts that offer the standard amenities such as swimming pools, tennis or golf, and worthwhile food are almost nonexistent, though some are being developed now that the country is at peace. Distances are vast, roads are dangerous, the desert is forbidding and the hygiene is questionable.

For tourists, Egypt is an exhilarating country to visit, but as residents looking for a place to take a break from Cairo's noise, dirt and traffic, we were not interested in running off to see the Sphinx or making the long, boring drive to El Alamein.

Under the circumstances, the two best choices were Luxor and Aswan. Luxor (subject of countless travel articles) is the site of the most spectacular pharaonic monuments, including the Valley of the Kings where the tomb of King Tutankhamen was discovered. In Aswan, there is less to do and less to see, which made it the best place for a restful long weekend.

Aswan is the principal city of "upper" or Southern Egypt, 500 miles up the Nile from Cairo. On paper its attractions are modest — clean air, the Nile, peace and quiet and, of course, the great dam — but it has a gentle allure that is a compound of atmosphere, history and geography.

Africa begins in Aswan. The people, mostly Nubians, are darker-skinned than in the rest of Egypt. Their music has the rhythms of the Sudan and Ethiopia. Aswan was a supply point and administrative center for the British campaign against the Mahdist rebellion in the Sudan, and Lord Kitchener, the hero of those campaigns, planted an elegant garden in Aswan that is still notable for its tall palms and lush vegetation.

Aswan has about 500,000 people, but it is really little more than two streets parallel to the river. It is possible to walk from one end of town to the other, but there are also horse-drawn carriages and rickety taxis. Along the inner street, a block from the river, Aswan has all the depressing problems of urban Egypt: inadequate housing, ragged, dirty children, shabby shops selling inferior goods, vegetable stands and butcher shops aswarm with flies. But it is quieter and more languid than Cairo, somehow gentler in its poverty, and thus a good place for a visitor to see at leisure a face of Egypt that will not be on his tour itinerary in Cairo.

The river is narrow at Aswan, less than 100 yards across at some points. On the far bank the brown, rockey desert runs all the way down to the edge of the water, and there is little to see, but the stream itself is dotted with the sails of little boats available for leisurely tours of the numerous small islands.

The best thing to do in Aswan is sit by the river and do nothing, but there are sights for those who need to move around. The great dam and Lake Nasser behind it, a few miles south of town, are worth a look. So are the Philae temples, great pharaonic relics saved from permanent inundation beneath the dam's waters by an international campaign that financed their relocation. The mausoleum of the Aga Khan is in Aswan; so is St. Simeon's monastery, the largest in the Coptic Christian church, dating back to the sixth century.

Aswan can be reached by road from Cairo, but I don't recommend it. The road is dangerous, and there is little of interest along the route. There is also train service — it takes 16 hours. The best way is to take the early-morning Egyptair flight. The plane stops briefly at Aswan to unload luggage, then goes to Abu Simbel.

The approaches to the city are unprepossessing, consisting of military camps and monochromatic desert. But the city itself offers a haven of flowering trees, perpetual sunshine and a tranquil atmosphere where the call to prayer at the mosque, instead of jangling the nerves as it does in Cairo, rises exotically in the silence.

309 IN MEMORIAM

MONTAGUE - To the memory of our dear father, Christopher N. who passed away April 1, 1971 and our beloved mother, Elizabeth B. who followed just a year later, April 6, 1972.

So many things have happened,
Since they were called away,
So many things to share with them,
Had they been left to stay.
So many times we've needed them,
So many times we've cried,
If love could have saved them,
They never would have died.
It broke our hearts to lose them,
But they did not go alone,
For part of us went with them,
The day God called them home.
No words were ever written,
No smile could ever hide,
The heartaches and the emptiness,
That's hidden deep inside.
Our thoughts are always with them,
Their place no one can fill,
In life we loved them dearly,
In death we love them still.

So sadly missed by their daughters, Eileen and Audrey, and their families.

TWYFORD — In memory of Connie Twyford, April 6, 1979.
"Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me."
— In loving memory, her son Allan.

God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given
And though the body
slumbers here
The soul is safe in heaven.

Charman urges housing aid

By AL FORREST

Premier Bennett should go it alone and provide financial incentives to solve the B.C. housing shortage, says Canadian Real Estate Association president Eric Charman of Victoria.

The supply of apartments to rent and houses to buy is rapidly drying up, he said.

Charman said he recently had talks with federal Public Works Minister Paul Cosgrove who assured him Ottawa is considering reinstating capital cost allowances to spur apartment construction.

"But it could be quite a few months before Ottawa takes any action. In the meantime, the premier should do what he can now to solve this problem."

The Canadian housing shortage is worst in Victoria and Vancouver, although Hamilton, Calgary and downtown Toronto are also beginning to feel the pinch, he said.

"Everywhere I go I hear the same story. There is almost nothing left to rent or buy."

In Victoria, he said, house prices are soaring due to the small number of listings.

"When there are only a few houses on the market, everyone starts bidding and the prices go crazy."

The rental situation is also alarming, he said.

During the 1970s, Ottawa allowed a special capital cost allowance writeoff to anyone constructing an apartment. These concessions ended Dec. 31.

Charman said he is convinced Ottawa eventually will reinstate the writeoffs but something must be done now while everyone is waiting for the federal government to act.

Because the problem is most acute in B.C., it would be a logical move for the premier to take some interim measure now.

Charman made the comments in an interview on a brief visit home. His speaking schedule includes speeches in Toronto, Athens, Charlottetown, West Virginia and Mexico.

In his travels across Canada, he said, he has encountered a growing exasperation about the Quebec question.

"In the Maritimes, in Ontario, in the west — everyone tells me they are becoming less and less tolerant about Quebec's threats to separate."

For the first time, he said, he has been hearing counter-threats that other provincies should begin planning to survive without Quebec.

"If Newfoundland strikes it rich (with oil), the whole Maritimes will be strengthened. Ontario could survive without Quebec and the west is strong.

"Alberta and B.C. could be a strong unit either as part of the United States or alone. This is the way people are talking."

Alberta and B.C. will be the two favored provinces throughout the 1980s.

He said the shift of population and wealth to the west is rapidly increasing.

Charman, who continues to be active in his firm, Charman Pacific Realty, whenever he's in town, is organizing the first national conference on housing, to be held in Ottawa in November.

WIELDING A MEAN CROWBAR, Premier Bennett Thursday formally started the restoration of Temple Emmanuel synagogue at Blanshard and Pandora. Under the smiling approval of restoration chairman Martin Levin, the premier knocked off the first piece of stucco, revealing original red brick. Provincial Heritage Trust has given $50,000 for the project and the synagogue's fund-raising committee has gathered another $125,000 in donations from Victorians. The campaign, like the original construction of the synagogue in 1863, was an ecumenical effort. The interior will be restored later, when the committee has raised another $75,000. UBC's Young to chair provincial Arts Board

Norman Young has been named chairman of the British Columbia Arts Board.

Young, of the University of B.C.'s theatre department, is chairman of Vancouver's Civic Theatre Board, member of Vancouver's Committee on the Arts, a member of the Vancouver Archives Commission and honorary president of the B.C. Drama Association.

For two years he has been chairman of the grants committee of the arts board.

The arts board is a 15-member advisory committee which makes recommendations on grants to arts groups from the B.C. Cultural Fund.

Other new appointments to the board are: Robert Bennetts, chairman of the board of Northern Lights College, Dawson Creek; Kenneth Bagshaw, lawyer and lecturer on arts and the law, West Vancouver; and William Featherston, a nationally-recognized artist from Squamish.

Other members of the board are: Jan Peterson, Port Alberni; Janet McLeod, Terrace; Mary Chen, Prince George; Doug Talney, Vancouver; Maxine Dewdney, Trail; Susan LePage, Vancouver; Dr. Barry Moore, Chilliwack; Mrs. Daryl Dehamel, Kelowna; Philip Abbott, Cranbrook; Dorothea Crofton, Ganges.

CRD off the beam?

The Capital Regional Board appears to be straying from its policy of calling tenders for purchase of material for large projects.

At a committee meeting directors approved a plan for CH2M, a firm of engineering consultants, to spend $139,700 plus freight and taxes for steel pipe from Interprovincial Steel and Pipe Corporation Ltd.

The pipe would be used for the Clover Point outfall, and would have to be coated and lined for an additional $74,625.

At the same time the consultants recommended the region give up the idea of using polyethelene pipe and sell the 5,000 feet already owned by the region.

More than a third of this pipe may be useless because it's been stored outside.

Although none of the directors on the committee which heard the proposal objected to the purchase, regional chief engineer Norman Howard said later that this may be the only immediately available source of this type of pipe. He said it's priced below market value.

Let there be light, city council says

City council's downtown economic development committee has sprung for $8,600 to add more lighting in dark areas of downtown and to buy more street decorations for Christmas and the tourist season.

But aldermen rejected the Downtown Victoria Association's request for another $72,000 to pay for promotional advertising of the downtown parkades and increased evening foot patrols by the police in the downtown core.

Included in that total was $6,500 for accent lighting of downtown architectural gems. Heading the DVA's list was the Union Club, followed by St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, The Bay department store and the Masonic Temple opposite.

But aldermen did endorse a $3,600 plan to add lights in "dead spots" downtown to enhance the commercial area. Areas the DVA wants lit up include Bastion Square, the west side of Government from Herald to Chatham, the parking lot across Fisgard from the police station, the east side of Wharf from Fisgard to Pandora and the small park on Belleville next to the Swiftsure Inn.

City votes money to join Federation

After several years on the outside, Victoria city council has decided for the sake of national unity to rejoin the Federation of Canadian Municipalities.

City council's legal and intergovernmental affairs committee voted to spend the $2,300 a year to take out membership.

"I'm in favor," said Ald. Robin Blencoe. "I think the capital of B.C. ought to be in touch with the rest of Canada."

Ald. Frank Carson voted against it but Mayor Bill Tindall and Ald. Gretchen Brewin supported rejoining the organization, which was known as the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities when Victoria quit several years ago.

Convair Coach appeal to be heard May 12

The final phase of an appeal by Convair Coach Lines Ltd., which operated a direct bus route to Vancouver International Airport, will be heard May 12 in Vancouver.

The B.C. Motor Carrier Commission earlier had ordered the company to cease operating the service which ran between the Dominion Hotel in downtown Victoria and the airport.

At previous commission sessions on the appeal, testimony indicated that Convair was paying kickbacks to several travel agents in the city to get the service established.

The licence is actually held by Hustle Bus Victoria Ltd. which didn't start running a service until after the commission announced its intention to withdraw permission.

KAMPALA (Reuter) — Uganda will not send athletes to the Moscow Olympics because it is suspending participation in all international sports competition for a year, the government-run newspaper Uganda Times says.

Red Shield needs help

Recruiting more canvassers is the Salvation Army's first objective in this year's Red Shield appeal.

The campaign under chairman George Easdon, which will open May 5, will focus on the theme: "Give Us This Day."

The target is $250,000.

Captain William Merritt, of the campaign's publicity committee, said he hopes it will be as successful as last year's which collected $251,000 — $34,000 over target.

More canvassers are needed this year because the campaign will be extended to View Royal and the western communities.

Merritt said more volunteers are also needed in the Fernwood, Marigold, Wilkinson, Cordova Bay, North Sidney, High Quadra, Northridge and Glanford areas.

Anyone wishing to volunteer about an hour of time can call the appeal's office at 386-6304 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. during the week.

Crystal free ride over today

Being clever enough to avoid the crowd is okay — unless everyone has the same idea.

Victorians have been avoiding weekends and holidays when they line up for the free admission to the Crystal Garden, and the weekends and holidays have been relatively quiet.

The busiest days have been during the week when everybody was trying to avoid the crowd.

Admission to the Crystal Garden is $2, starting today.

The free admissions started last Saturday when 5,000 attended. There were 6,600 on Sunday but the total shot over 9,000 on both Monday and Tuesday.

Busiest day was Wednesday when 9,780 went through. The total slipped back to the 9,000 level Thursday.

On Good Friday, which was expected to be the busiest day of all, the total fell to 7,725.

In all, about 56,000 went inside during the opening week.

No more than 400 can be inside the building at any one time, owing to fire marshal regulations. Present policy is to limit the total to 350.

The hours at the Crystal revert to 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. starting immediately.

On June 1, the hours will be extended to 9:30 p.m. daily.

A season's pass may be purchased for $2 by someone has who has already paid an admission fee.

Senior citizens and children under six get free admission except in June, July, August and September. The rate for children from six to 16 is $1.

There is a special family admission rate of $5.

Delay in grant threatens Saanich youth program

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Saanich police's youth and community services program is in jeopardy because of uncertainty the attorney-general's ministry will come through with funds to hire a youth and family counsellor.

The police board is incensed and at a hastily-called meeting Thursday asked its chairman, Mayor Mel Couvelier, to seek an immediate meeting with Attorney-General Allan Williams.

Couvelier said $200,000 of the police budget has been diverted to restructuring the youth section on the understanding the province would provide funds for a counsellor.

Insp. Ted Owens, head of the new section, told the board he met with Don McComb, special consultant to the attorney-general ministry, last December and that the ministry approved on Feb. 12 a $7,000 grant for a consultant to prepare the program.

But a second request for $69,425 to hire a counsellor for a two-year trial period has not come through.

Owens said McComb told consultant Donna Watt Levin on March 3 that the chances for money for the counsellor seemed good.

But McComb indicated that because there are limited funds available, the project would be looked upon with more favor if Saanich could chip in.

Owens said he sent in a revised proposal on March 12 pointing out the municipality had committed $150,000 for salaries of the seven officers in the section and another $43,000 to cover administration and other costs.

He said the youth section, formed in January, has proved its worth. In three months it has dealt with 298 youths and investigated 87 incidents involving 24 break-ins, 20 thefts and 13 drug offences. Only 40 youths were charged. Most offenders were in the 14 to 17 age group.

Owens said that because the focus is more on intervention and early detection officers need help in the area of counselling.

He said considerable work has gone into developing the program. The University of Victoria School of Social Work, human resources, probation service and schools have all given active support and encouragement.

The police force also is ready, Owens said.

"To have it go flops is very dangerous. The boys are going to be very leary of any other new program that come along after this if it doesn't go through."

Said Chief Bob Peterson: "It's hard to understand why we wouldn't get response when you look at the value at the other end of the system."

Board member Reg Midgley agreed.

"We have to go as high as we can and the tell the government to get out of left field," he said.

Bob Adamson, acting director of policy and planning for the attorney-general ministry, said there has been no decision to withhold funds.

The problem, he said, is the ministry hasn't completed its budget allocations.

"It (the Saanich proposal) is an important item to us," he said.

250 technologists set for conference here

Applying the technology of today to the needs of tomorrow will be uppermost in the minds of the 250 delegates to the annual meeting of the Society of Engineering Technologists April 11-13.

The meeting will be held at the Royal Oak Inn, with the final banquet, floor show and dance in the Student Union Building at the University of Victoria.

The future role of diploma technologists and the state of technological education is expected to dominate the main open forum session April 12.

Panel members will include Dr. Terrynce Clement, director of college and institute programs, ministry of education; Gordon Thom, principal of the B.C. Institute of Technology; Anthony Manera, principal of Vancouver Community College; John Leech, executive director of the Society of Engineering Technologists; and Dr. L.H. Morin, principal of Camosun College.

One highlight of the weekend will be a mockup of the ANIK B setellite.

ANIK B has made possible what educators call "distance learning by interactive instructional TV," meaning children can communicate with the far-away teacher they see on their TV screens, as well as classmates in faroff locales.

Alexandra to visit Island on April 29

Princess Alexandra will make a five-day visit to Vancouver Island beginning April 29.

Police quit, guns toted

GOLD BAR, Wash. (UPI) — This town's three-man police force has resigned. The mayor says people are carrying guns and he has been threatened.

"I'm afraid for the good people of this town," said Police Chief Al Hunstad, who resigned under pressure from the city council. "When you have a situation like this, you have fear, and when you have fear, people start packing guns."

Mayor Ed Grant, who said he has received telephone threats, said:

"I will give this town one month. With the dope in this valley and the motorcycle gangs, we're not going to stand a chance. People in this town already are carrying guns."

Grant asked for volunteers to provide temporary police protection for the town's 650 residents. Several men signed up as potential deputies to serve after Hunstad leaves his job in two weeks.

Grant said council members Henry McDaniel and Tom Schroeder had been pressuring him to get rid of Hunstad, Gold Bar's first fulltime salaried police chief, because of a deficit in the police department's budget. Hunstad has been police chief since Dec. 25, 1977.

Schroeder told a day council meeting that the town can't afford to support the police department at its present spending level.

The other officers who resigned are Robert Larkin and Brent Stuvland. Both serviced on a part-time basis.

A recall election attempt is aimed at council members Schroeder, McDaniel and Floyd Collins.

IN AGREEMENT

In 1940, three of the Chess Greats were asked: "Who do you think is the best player in the world?"

Here are their answers:
Alekhine: "Alekhine"
Reshevsky: "Reshevsky"
Fine: "I have the impression that it is Fine!"

So the question was changed: "And who is the second best chess player in the world?". All three gave the same answer: "Michael Botvinnik!"

THE CALIFORNIAN CYCLONE!

Only 23 years old, Larry Christiansen of Modesto, who gained his Grandmaster title in 1977, played excellent chess in Linares, Spain, last December. He won the event with 8 points out of 11, losing only to Viktor Korchnoi, who tied for second, third and fourth place with E. Rivas, Spain and G. Castro, Colombia, all scoring 7½.

In the following game against N. Visier of Spain, Larry demolishes his opponent quickly.

SOVIET CHESS CHAMPIONSHIP

Grandmaster Efim Geller of Odessa, who is 54, is the oldest top-ranking competitor around these days. For the second time in his chess career, he won the U.S.S.R Championship, considered the strongest national title tournament in the world. True, this year, a number of U.S.S.R. greats like Anatoly Karpov, Boris Spassky and Tigran Petrosian, did not participate, but it still was a great triumph for Geller, whose style runs to sharp play and deep opening preparation. Mikhael Tal , Gary Kasparov and Yuri Balashov followed closely.

Curbs on mining the seabed aimed to protect Third World

By BERNARD NOSSITER
New York Times

UNITED NATIONS — What is described as a global cartel is being formed here to curb mining of the mineral wealth in the deep sea.

Consumer hopes of a bonanza from the billions of tons of nickel, copper, cobalt and manganese fixed in nodules on the seabed are likely to be disappointed by the production limits to be imposed in the proposed Treaty on the Law of the Sea.

Hundreds of delegates are bargaining over the remaining unsettled clauses, and the treaty is likely to be adopted early next year. Tentative agreement has been reached on the main lines of a formula to put a ceiling on mining.

It means that, in the early stages of exploitation at least, the seabed is not likely to add more than one ton of minerals for every four tons produced on land.

The authors of the sea-law treaty are writing in output limits to protect the markets and prices of those nations that mine the prospective materials on land. For example, Canada is a major nickel producer, Chile, Peru, Zambia and Zaire are all copper-mining countries, and Zaire also mines cobalt.

"It is a cartel," said Satya N. Nandan of Fiji, chairman of the group negotiating the seabed mining policy. The formula to restrict output, he said in an interview, "is designed to stop prices from falling."

"If the industrial countries were allowed to have a free-for-all in the seabed, this could ruin the economies of Third World producers," he said. "A balance must be struck between the interests of consumers and the possible impact on Third World economies."

Elliot L. Richardson of the United States defends the ceiling as "the sort of price needed to achieve agreement.

"We have no conceded right to high-sea mining," he said. "The Third World countries want this subject to the control of the world community as a whole."

In any event, he said, the production limits, to be reviewed 20 years after mining begins, probably allow for as much seabed output as commercial companies will undertake.

By "free-for-all," Nandan means freedom to extract whatever is economically possible. Although he talks of preserving Third World nations from price competition, Canada does not fit this description.

When the treaty is completed, an international seabed authority will hand out licenses to mine the ocean. The authority will be bound by a complex formula to determine how much can be extracted.

In essence, mining companies will be able to take out only three-fifths of the yearly increase in the market for nickel. The other two-fifths of the increment will be reserved for Canada and others who now produce mine on land. But in order not to choke off output from the sea entirely, the ocean producers will also be able to lift an amount equal to the market's growth in the five years before commercial production begins.

That works out this way: The United States Bureau of Mines estimates that nickel production, at present prices, would grow about 3.4 percent annually until the year 2000. Growth would be more rapid if prices fell. The current world output of nickel is 800,000 tons and the first commercial production from the sea might take place in 1988.

The seabed miners would thus be allowed to take an amount equal to the increment from 1983 through 1987 plus three-fifths of the increment in 1988. That would limit them to 215,000 tons in a world market of 1 million tons. By the year 2000, sea mines could produce at most 731,000 tons in a world market of 2.1 million.

The treaty writers have also blocked any shrewd operators who decide to throw away nickel to get at the almost limitless amounts of copper, cobalt and manganese imbedded in the seabed nodules. The mining authority would permit mining of the other metals only in amounts equal to those found in the nodules that yield the upper limit on nickel.

In a world riven with inflation, the restrictions on seabed mining have already brought protests from industrial users and even from some producers in developed nations. There is a move in the United State Congress to ignore the treaty and give American companies permission to mine on their own. But the rich countries, including the United States, have accepted the limits largely to win Third World assent for other features in the sea-law treaty.

Above all, the industrial world feared that Third World nations would attempt to extend their territorial waters from 12 to 200 miles off their shores. That would have prevented the free passage of both commercial and naval vessels. To ensure strategic freedom of the seas, the wealthier nations have swallowed the mining curbs.

The principle of limiting output to support and even raise prices lies at the heart of Third World economic thinking. These countries hope to do for their commodities what the oil states have done for crude oil. The United Nations is soon to begin a "global negotiation" designed to achieve just this. But envoys from the industrial world say they can see nothing to tempt them to an agreement.

Before the judge

Judge Blake Allan admitted in provincial court Thursday the move was unusual but ordered a 47-year-old man held in custody on drinking-driving charges.

Harry Eric Liddle, 1993 Kaltasin, was charged with two counts each of impaired driving, one of being in care and control of a vehicle, and driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 in separate incidents Monday and Wednesday.

Allan denied bail after Crown counsel Robert Mulligan alleged that Liddle had seven previous convictions for impaired driving and one each for driving while under suspension and criminal negligence.

Liddle was remanded until Tuesday for plea.

A 33-year-old Metchosin man was given a 14-day jail term for having care and control of a vehicle while impaired.

James Robert Netherton, 3289 Happy Valley, pleaded guilty to his second drinking-driving conviction in less than 15 months.

Court was told Netherton was stopped by Colwood RCMP about 1:50 p.m. March 10 near Colwood Corners where his vehicle had been driven over a sidewalk.

Breath test readings of .20 and .19 were obtained by the RCMP.

Netherton was convicted of impaired driving Jan. 25, 1978, and fined $400.

Fined for impaired driving were: Michael Don Simpson, 37, of 970 Preston Way, $400; Sewa Singh Guray, 43, of 3975 Wilkinson, $400; Moffet McPherson, 62, of Hornby Island, $50; and Kenneth James Sheppard, 58, of Shawnigan Lake, $50.

In addition, Sheppard was placed on 12 months probation by Allan, who ordered him to report to the Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society for counselling.

What's YOUR view on a bridge-tunnel link?

The question of a permanent bridge-tunnel link between Vancouver Island and the mainland is a hot topic.

The provincial government is talking about a $500,000 feasibility study on the project, the cost of which has been estimated at more than $2 billion.

Engineering experts say such a link is within our technological capabilities but have raised some questions about both the cost and the psychological and social impacts of the project.

Government spokesmen — including Science Minister Pat McGeer — say they want public reaction to the idea and the Times has decided to help out.

The coupon below gives Greater Victorians a chance to express their opinion.

In order to get a broad public response on the proposal — which if implemented could have a tremendous effect on Vancouver Island lifestyles — the coupon will appear again Monday.

Please answer yes or no to the question but feel free to add any additional comments — as briefly as possible — and mail back your coupon to "Tunnel", c/o Editorial Department, Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas Street, Victoria V8W 2N4. Or bring the coupon to the Times switchboard.

Coupons should be in by 9 a.m. next Friday. Only one per person please.

We'll publish the results of the poll, print some of the more interesting comments and let the government know how you feel about the idea.

Should the province build a fixed link to the mainland?

Fiery blowout feared as volcano shakes

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — Constant earth tremors and periodic blasts of ash and steam from Mount St. Helens lead scientists to expect a major eruption from the volcano.

National Guardsmen were activated today to help county agencies control crowds around the mountain.

Col. Robert Rudolph, operations and military support officer for the state guard, said the 60 soldiers called up to join local law enforcement officials represented an "initial" contingent.

Rudolph said all 5,500 of Washington's National Guard were available in the event of a "major disaster."

The call-up of guardsmen was authorized by state officials acting under an official state of emergency signed by Gov. Dixy Lee Ray Thursday. With the mountain showing all signs of getting ready for a major blowout, other state agencies readied plans for a possible evacuation of the area.

Magma (molten lava) working its way up inside the 9,677-foot mountain set off the largest "harmonic tremor" yet, a rolling shaker midday Friday that lasted an unnerving 33 minutes, seismologists reported.

As the undulating died away, the volcano roared twice, spitting grit, steam and ash 15,000 feet into the sky for periods of 10 minutes.

While one sharp earthquake measuring 4.4 on the open-ended Richter scale jolted the mountain during the afternoon, U.S. Geological Survey scientists said earthquakes measuring under 3.0 on the Richter scale were occurring by the "thousands" each day.

"They're going on constantly, ranging from 1.0 to 3.0 and on up," said one seismologist at the U.S. Geologic Survey observatory at Newport, Wash.

Those in excess of 3.0 were "running about two or three per hour," and temblors in excess of 4.0 were rattling the mountain approximately every six hours, University of Washington spokesman Dave Endicott said.

The estimated 60 Spirit Lake area residents were evacuated days ago, except for salty Harry R. Truman, 83, who has refused to leave his 50-year-old lodge located some 6,000 feet beneath the mountain's fuming cone unless it was "feet first."

Visit the stars

Roy Scheider became well-known to movie-goers with his performance as a harried small-town policeman trying to protect the community from a giant shark in Jaws.

He was also a star in Jaws II, The French Connection, and Marathon Man.

Scheider has been nominated best actor for his performance in All That Jazz, a comedy about the life of a theatre and movie director.

Some New York critics were surprised when the film matched Kramer vs. Kramer with nine Oscar nominations. The nomination of Scheider was also a minor surprise, although his performance had been rated highly.

Others nominated for best actor are Dustin Hoffman, Kramer vs. Kramer, Jack Lemmon, The China Syndrome; Al Pacino, And Justice for All; and Peter Sellers, Being There.

Readers who correctly predict the winners for best actor, actress and movie will have a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood, in a contest sponsored by the Victoria Times and VI*90.

There are also five runner-up awards.

Charles felled by exhaustion

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Prince Charles, looking slightly sun-burned, was released from a hospital today, apparently recovered from the heat exhaustion that caused him to be admitted to the medical institution after a brisk polo game in sweltering heat.

"There he is, there he is," cried several of the dozens of staff members and visitors crowding the lobby of the Good Samaritan Hospital as the 31-year-old heir to the throne walked out to a waiting luxury car in which other young men were sitting.

Prince Charles, dressed in a navy-blue blazer, khaki pants and a blue-striped shirt, said nothing as he left but acknowledged the onlookers and reporters and photographers with a faint salute.

When he reached the red convertible, he turned, smiled at the nurse who had walked out with him, shook her hand and climbed into the driver's seat, saying lightly: "I'm all right."

He drove away, honking his horn once but not looking back.

Prince Charles was admitted to the hospital at 7:20 p.m. Friday after being checked by doctors at the institution's emergency room. His condition was then listed as satisfactory.

The prince had looked flushed and tired after finishing the match, played in high humidity and 32-degree heat at the posh Palm Beach Polo and Country Club on Friday afternoon.

Alligator on loose

BURNABY (UPC) — Police have advised citizens here to be on the lookout for a 45-centimetre long Kaman alligator that disappeared after being left to catch some afternoon sunshine in a backyard tub.

So far police are not sure whether 18-year-old Danny Todd's unusual pet, named Alex, was stolen or simply crawled away on his own, but they warned people to keep their distance from the alligator's mean bite.

City's meter men get 'hazard pay'

Victoria's motorists have become so cantankerous — even resorting to fisticuffs at times — that parking meter patrol men will get "hazard pay."

City council's finance committee has approved a 35-cent-an-hour raise for the stalwarts of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires.

They are veterans of the Canadian Forces and the RCMP but apparently the confrontations with abusive motorists are coming so thick and fast they are somewhat shell-shocked.

Victoria commandant J.C. Allan told aldermen in a letter that commissionaires are suffering morale problems.

"They are instructed to and make every effort to maintain the best possible rapport with the public, but this is not always possible.

"The level of abuse and physical mistreatment has increased over the past few years and has become a factor in the morale of the patrol," said Allan.

Now the corps bills the city $6.09 an hour for the meter patrol work it has done since 1955. The commissionaire gets $5.01 directly, with another 74 cents in direct and indirect benefits. The raise authorized by the committee will bring their direct pay to $5.36 an hour.

Assistant municipal manager Colin Crisp said police confirm recent cases of physical violence and threats against commissionaires while they are on the job.

"Verbal abuse frequently occurs."

He said the extra 35 cents an hour will cost the city $7,850 over a year.

And that's just one more bite out of the pugnacious motorist's pocketbook if he also happens to be a City of Victoria taxpayer.

Anti-Sadat protesters get bolder

ASSIUT, Egypt — Egypt's young Islamic zealots, with the deposed shah of Iran as a new target and a dead worker as their first "martyr," are becoming increasingly bold in opposition to President Anwar Sadat and his pro-Western policies.

The organized movements of Moslem fundamentalism are riding a wave of Islamic fervor washing across Egypt and the Middle East from the example of Iran.

Although so far they have only a limited following here, the extremists pose a challenge to Sadat's government because of their potential for arousing mob power in the teeming streets of Cairo or on the nation's 17 university campuses.

The move into the open also coincides with a recrudescence of suspicion and bitterness between Egypt's 36 million Moslems and its six million Coptic Christians despite Sadat's careful efforts to preserve a heritage of communal harmony.

An estimated 5,000 Islamic students took over the university here Thursday for a round of speeches, marching and chanting that included anti-Christian epithets and anti-Sadat slogans.

"Oh, pharaoh of this age, we don't want the shah in Egypt," the students cried, addressing Sadat as an ancient Egyptian despot in a chant that in Arabic rang out in appealing rhyme.

The protest leaders here Thursday, however, had for the first time a "martyr" to excite the crowd with and, perhaps for that reason, openly presented their previously unknown over-all leader.

He identified himself as Helmi Gazar, a 25-year-old student in his final year of medicine at Cairo University who accused Sadat of leading Egypt "far from God."

Bearded in the manner of Islamic purists — but dressed in Western clothes — Gazar spoke calmly and prudently in a conversation with reporters, urging that Egypt be led into more devout practice of its Moslem heritage.

"The principal thing (wrong with Sadat) is that he does not make the Koran be applied in the country of Egypt and we of course deny, or refuse, this system of life," he said. "He is away from God. We reject it all."
